Compromise Settles Clash Of Yugoslavs And Hungary

League Group Is Named to End Terrorism in Balkans.

Peace Arranged By Major Powers

Rumanian Envoy Raps 'Treaty Violations' by Budapest.

Geneva, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—The threat of war in the Balkans receded tonight when the League of Nations Council in special session reached complete agreement on a solution for the Yugoslav-Hungary dispute.

Both Yugoslavia and Hungary agreed to a compromise accord at the end of a bitter council session. The delegates had adjourned until 10:30 p. m., and met again for final consideration of the draft agreement and approval of the two governments of the action of their delegates.

The Hungarian government telephoned Tibor Eckhardt, its delegate, at 11:30 p. m., confirming his acceptance of the plan, in principle. The call ended more than half an hour's nervous waiting by the council, fearing Hungary's last-minute rejection might stir up the entire conflict.

Drive on Terrorism.

The compromise establishes a committee of 11 to study repressive measures against terrorism. Yugoslavia's demand that Hungary be held guilty of protecting terrorists in connection with the assassination of King Alexander I, at Marseille, October 9, was refused.

However, the resolution stated that there was "a certain responsibility for the relative acts connected with preparation of the crime," and asks that Hungary "take immediate and appropriate punitive action against any of its authorities whose guilt may be established."

This wording was a gesture toward Yugoslavia's demands against Hungary, yet generally was interpreted as no direct indictment of Hungary.

Major Powers, including France, Italy and Great Britain, played a leading role in delicate negotiations leading to this solution to the threat of war.

Provisions of Plan.

The compromise is divided into three major sections:

1. A general statement of the various aspects of the case.

2. An invitation to Hungary to pursue her investigation of the individual responsibility in the terrorism which resulted in the assassination of King Alexander.

3. Recommendation for approval of a convention against terrorism in general as advocated by France.

Capt. Anthony Eden, of Britain; Baron Pompeo Aloisi, of Italy, and Foreign Minister Pierre Laval, of France, were the intermediaries.

The French statesman presented the project designed to curb politi-

NRA Defunct, Says Johnson

'Extinct as the Dodo,' His Claim; He Inquires, 'Who's Richberg?'

New York, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, former NRA administrator, paused while autographing his books for boys in a department store this evening to announce that the NRA is dead.

The NRA is "as extinct as the dodo; deader than any door nail," the general asserted.

Obviously still irritated at the disagreements between Donald R. Richberg and himself which preceded his resignation as NRA chieftain, Johnson said the NRA simply isn't operating any more.

"Who is in error? Donald Richberg?" he was asked.

"Who's Richberg?" the general said brusquely. "What does he do?"

It was explained that Richberg succeeded Johnson as NRA chief and may be considered, after President Roosevelt, one of the most powerful political figures in the United States.

"Well the NRA is dead," Johnson replied. "That's obvious. I don't know who's fault it is. I'm not near enough NRA now to know."

Johnson said he was not advising anybody how to run NRA or anything else.

"That was the trouble I had. Everybody was telling me how to run it."

Asked if he would give NRA six months or a year more of life, Johnson replied:

"I don't give it any time. It's dead. Congress could revive it. The basic principles upon which I founded it should not be allowed to lapse."

Juarez Gambling to End.

Juarez, Mexico., Dec. 10 (AP).—An order closing all gambling resorts in Juarez had been received by police from the governor of Chihuahua. The Tivoli, largest gambling house on the Mexican border, closed last midnight.

Divorce Void, Says Ex-Wife Of Reynolds

Winston-Salem, N. C., Dec. 10 (AP).—Mrs. Anne Cannon Reynolds Smith attacked the validity of her own Reno divorce from the late Smith Reynolds and thus his second marriage to Libby Holman, Broadway actress, in a court action today claiming his $25,000,000 tobacco fortune for her daughter.

Contending she was Reynolds' lawful widow as her Nevada divorce was illegal, Mrs. Smith filed a petition objecting to a distribution of the fortune proposed by Reynolds' brother and sisters and asking the court to distribute it "according to law and precedence."

Such a distribution, she contended, would deliver the entire sum to her daughter, Anne Cannon Reynolds, II, disallowing the claims of Christopher Smith Reynolds, son of Miss Holman, on the ground his mother's marriage to Reynolds was void.

Sources close to the Reynolds family said Mrs. Smith's action brought into the open phases of the questions involved in distribution of the dead tobacco heir's estate which they had hoped to avoid.

The distribution proposed by R. J. Reynolds, jr., Mrs. Charles Babcock and Mrs. Henry W. Bagley—brother and sisters of Smith Reynolds—was reported to have taken into consideration the question of the legality of the divorce in proposing a

Graft Put Guns In Many Lands, Inquiry Finds

(Associated Press.)

A trail of graft and bribery payments reaching from Central America to China as competing arms salesmen sought orders was disclosed yesterday in the Senate investigation of the munitions industry.

In one instance, a letter introduced as evidence declared in some Latin American sales, State Department officials were "willing to shut their eyes to small graft on such transactions." The letter came from the files of the Remington Arms Co

Civil and military officials in Mexico, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Guatemala, and even a president of Honduras, as well as officials in China, were mentioned as the recipients of the payments in data taken from the files of the Winchester and Remington companies.

Corps of Officials.

Officials of the two concerns were grouped before the committee, packing the well below the horseshoe committee bench. One or another of the officials sometimes disputed some of the assertions in these letters, but with respect to others they readily agreed the payments had been made.

The head of the Nicaraguan national guard, trained by United States Marines, was said to have received a "commission" on orders from that country, with the "knowledge" of the country's president. This, the letter said, could not be called bribery or graft.

A man named only as Gen. Patilla was reported to have received "presents," the largest of which was $250, from E. E. Jonas, Remington agent, for persuading purchasers of sporting arms to buy the Remington product before he, as war minister of Guatemala, would issue a permit for their importation.

Another letter told of El Salvador equipping its army with German pistols for which Remington would get ammunition orders "regardless of competition." The payments were to come from docking soldiers 10 colones a month for the shells.

Still another epistle described a $200 payment by a munitions agent

NRA Orders Are Attacked In High Court

Justices Voice Surprise at Casualness of Code Set-up.

Two Oil Companies Seek to Test Legality of Entire Act.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Hearing their first New Deal case, members of the Supreme Court yesterday registered surprise at the apparently casual promulgation of executive orders and codes under the NRA assessing criminal penalties for their violation.

Justices of both the liberal and conservative wings of the tribunal virtually catechized Assistant Attorney General Harold M. Stephens as to the manner in which the codes and executive orders were published so that citizens might know what was required of them. Mr. Stephens explained there was no official or general publication of the codes.

The case before the court was an appeal of the Amazon Petroleum Corporation and the Panama Refining Co., east Texas oil companies, from a decision of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals refusing to enjoin Federal officials from enforcing regulations limiting their production of oil.

Question Legality of Entire Act.

The companies not only challenged the validity of the regulations issued by Petroleum Administrator Harold L. Ickes, but also challenged the constitutionality of the entire NRA act, especially section 9(c), which authorizes the President to prohibit the interstate shipment of petroleum produced in excess of State quotas.

It is possible this case may be decided on section 9(c) without reference to the remainder of the NRA act. The court, however, yesterday agreed to hear a case which attacks the validity of the retail automobile code and the NRA act. Thus within a short time the Supreme Court will have passed on the salient parts of that keystone in the New Deal program.

During the hearing on the oil production cases, Assistant Attorney General Stephens spent an apparently embarrassing time trying to explain to the court why in another case the Government obtained indictments against four Texan oil producers for conspiracy to violate a provision giving force to State oil production quotas which actually was not in the petroleum code then in effect.

Solemn Justices Amused.

Smiles appeared on the usually solemn faces of the justices and the crowd of lawyers that filled the room when Mr. Stephens admitted the trial court had sustained a demurrer to the indictment on the ground that the nonexistent section of the code was unconstitutional and that the Justice Department appealed this decision to the Supreme Court.

The nonexistence of the supposed provision of the code was not discovered until a few days before the Government prepared to argue the case before the Supreme Court. The case, known as United States against Smith et al., was withdrawn by the Government.

The provision of the oil code in question made production in excess of an allocation of a State quota an unfair trade practice and a violation of the code. This paragraph was in the original code promulgated by President Roosevelt August 19, 1933. The code was revised September 13, 1933, but that pro-

Inch of Snow Blankets City; Fair But Cold Forecast Today

Mercury Dips to 19 Here as Icy Wave Grips Coast From Miami to Hatteras; 2 Seamen Lost, Ship Helpless in Ocean Gale.

A dazzling one-inch carpet of snow crunched beneath Washingtonians' galoshes yesterday as winter spread its cloak of gales and icy temperatures throughout the Eastern section of the Nation.

For the District, it was the first real snowfall of the year. By 6 p. m. yesterday an inch had been recorded at the Weather Bureau, and predictions were for another half an inch to fall.

As Washingtonians turned up their coat collars and adjusted their ear muffs, the mercury sank to a low of 19 degrees at 3 p. m. yesterday, when the maximum was 22, recorded at noon.

Fair and Colder Today.

Today will be fair, with continued cold, officials at the Weather Bureau said last night. Tomorrow also will be fair, the forecast said.

On the stormy Atlantic Ocean the Japanese freighter Victoria Maru tossed helplessly, the Associated Press reported, her rudder and bridge torn away by mountainous waves that smashed relentlessly over her crumpling decks, killing her captain and chief officer. Her third officer was missing.

Other liners, swift greyhounds of the sea, were hours overdue as the surf pounded the coast from Maine to Hatteras.

Efforts to Aid Ship Are Vain.

Several ships were trying vainly to go to the aid of the stricken Nipponese craft, according to the Associated Press.

The Storm King wrought havoc in New York City, where the temperatures rivaled those of Sunday, which tumbled to 11 degrees. As he tried to build a fire to keep his home warm, a 6-year-old boy was burned to death.

In New England the mercury nose-dived and below-zero temperatures were the rule. Mount Washington reported a low of 20 degrees below, it was eight below in Northfield, Vt., and sub-zero weather made Boston shiver.

Blue Grass Region Blanketed.

Cleveland still sparkled under its first snow of the year. Central Indiana glistened beneath 2 inches of snow, the first of the season, and Kentucky's Blue Grass turned white beneath a recorded fall of an inch.

The cold wave lashed Florida.

Don Arrives in England From Isle of Man Jail

Liverpool, Dec. 10 (AP).—Kaye Don, British speed driver, arrived here today after spending ten weeks in jail at Douglas, Isle of Man, bearing no grudge against his jailors nor against the place that found him guilty of manslaughter after a racing accident.

Don, who has set many automobile and speed-boat records, announced he hoped to compete in several races in 1935 if his health and business permits. With Mrs. Don, he planned today to go to Florida after the holidays.

Keystone Vote Throws Byrns Well in Lead

Tennesseean's Bandwagon Rolls Toward House Speakership.

By Robert C. Albright.

The long-awaited break in the House Speakership free-for-all came with decisive suddenness yesterday, when Pennsylvania's Democratic House delegation of 23 members swung their entire voting strength to Representative Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee.

In a strategic preliminary caucus, with Senator-elect Joseph F. Guffey sitting in, the delegation decided to vote as a unit for Byrns. No action was recorded on the floor leadership, but there was strong implication Pennsylvania may enter a candidate of its own.

The decision was expected to be forerunner of a number of similar declarations, which in effect may determine the outcome of the Speakership contest a fortnight in advance of the Democratic caucus early in January.

Others Due to Follow.

Among the first States to climb on the Tennesseean's bandwagon will be Oklahoma, Michigan, West Virginia, Indiana and South Carolina, it was said in informed quarters. A large number of other votes have been pledged from States ranging from Massachusetts to California, it was learned.

The lanky, long-armed Byrns, whose service as floor leader and active part in the last congressional campaign gave him a running start on opponents, was called to the office of Representative Harry L. Haines to hear the report of the caucus. He expressed his gratitude to Haines and Guffey.

"Didn't I tell you," he grinned at waiting newspapermen. "It looks like I'm going to win this race."

First word from the caucus of the second largest House delegation was that Senator-elect (Boss) Guffey would seek authority to "trade" for the Keystone members, Guffey, who was guest of the Pennsylvania State Society at a dinner party last night, denied it. At the same time, he

The Canadian country doctor, who found himself famous overnight after delivering the Dionne quintuplets, and the former Governor agreed raising babies is a "tough job."

"I guess I've brought about 1,400 babies into the world," the physician said.

"Well," Smith said, "I guess you ought to know."

"Anyway, that's a lot of votes."

Speaking from experience, Smith said:

"I've had a few of them myself. They're not so hard to take care of if there's an older one around to button up the little ones. But when they're all the same age, and five of them, like the Dionne kids."

"Yes," Dr. Dafoe said, "then it's a little more difficult. You have no idea how hard it was in the beginning. The worst was they kept getting lost all the time. We kept them in a butcher's meat basket and we had to hunt like the devil for them sometimes. They looked like rats."

"Don't you think you'd better say 'kittens'," put in the physician's brother, Dr. William Dafoe, of Toronto, who accompanied him on the visit to Smith's office.

"I don't deserve any of the credit," the physician said. "It's their ancestry. All sturdy stock. You ought to come up and see them."

"Maybe next summer," Smith said. "It's too cold now."

The host then took the physicians up to see the sights from the tower of the Empire State Building.

"How do you like it," the former Governor said.

Would Eliminate Golf Links, Give City Port 5 Minutes Away.

A proposal that a model airport for the District of Columbia be constructed on the present site of East Potomac Park was presented to President Roosevelt yesterday by Clark Howell, chairman of the Federal Aviation Commission.

Howell later declared that the proposal "struck the President very favorably."

"He thinks the plan well worth investigation," Howell said. "He believes it one of the biggest things that could happen to the District."

The plan, originally proposed by Ewing Y. Mitchell, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, is designed to end the long controversy over air facilities for the Capital and to give Washington a modern landing field only five minutes from the downtown district.

Present Facilities Bad.

Presentation of the plan to the President followed hearings before the commission which indicated that present airplane facilities are among the worst in the country. While the proposal does not yet have official approval of the commission, Mr. Howell said he thought it was a "good idea." The commission inspected the site last week.

Accompanying the proposal was a memorandum prepared by Mitchell in which he expressed the opinion that Washington should set an example to the rest of the country and to the world by establishment of a modern air terminal.

"Providence," he said, "has provided a site which could at small expense be made into an almost ideal air terminal. From every angle East Potomac Park, sometimes called Hains Point, which is owned by the Government, is ideally located as the site of an air terminal which could be used equally well by airplanes, amphibians and seaplanes."

He pointed out that the site needs no filling-in and would save the Government several million dollars in purchase price and improvements. Although he made no estimate in his memorandum, Mitchell said he believed asphalt runways and hangars could be constructed for as little as $300,000. A previous proposal, rejected by the Public Works Administration, called for improvement of the Washington-Hoover Airport at a cost of $1,500,000.

On Site of Golf Courses.

The site of the proposed field begins at the railroad and extends about 4,000 feet toward the tip of the island. A terminal building and hangars would be erected adjacent to the railroad. The site contains 217 acres, now occupied by four nine-hole public golf courses. This would leave 112 acres for park purposes at the lower end of the island.

Plans as presented to the President contemplate two runways, each 4,000 feet long; one runway 3,000 feet long, and one runway 2,400 feet long. Runways on the proposed improved Washington-Hoover Airport would be slightly longer. This is offset, friends of the Potomac Park proposal say, by the fact that runways at the latter place would end at the edge of the water, thus giving from 800 to 2,000 feet

Roosevelt Asks U.S. Fight Crime On United Front

Legal Gaming Here Proposed By Mrs. Norton

Impossible to Stamp It Out, 'Washington's Mayor' Says.

Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), of New Jersey, chairman of the House District Committee, told The Post yesterday she favored legalized gambling in the National Capital.

Representative Norton, popularly known as the "Mayor of Washington," voiced her views on gambling at a time when a determined drive is being made to put through a more drastic antigambling bill in the next Congress.

Without revealing what she would do when the question comes up in the House, Representative Norton said:

"We know that gambling exists; why shut our eyes to it? No matter what laws are enacted, it is going to continue. Gambling will go underground, just as speakeasies flour-

President Sees Gain in Trade Vital to Farm

Cites Ways to Continue Income Rise in Talk to Federation.

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 10 (AP).—Declaring farm income has increased [illegible] last year despite the widespread drought, President Roosevelt told the American Farm Bureau Federation today that agriculture must continue to adjust its total production to the market that actually exists" if hopes for further gains are to be realized.

Two other requirements for "an even larger increase in 1935," were cited: A sufficient increase in industrial production to expand the market for farm products, and payment of more of the Nation's export trade by increased imports.

The President spoke by telephone from the White House to the thousands of farmers gathered for the sixteenth annual convention of the federation.

Cordell Hull, a native Tennesseean, who left the U. S. Senate to become Secretary of State, in the Roosevelt Cabinet, was on the program for an address on "agriculture and foreign trade agreements," but because of an attack of laryngitis the speech was read by his friend, Judge J. M. Gardenhire.

Hull's Statement.

In it Hull said "excessive tariffs" are now "working greater injury to agriculture than ever before" and urged the development of foreign trade.

Hull, with George F. Warren, Cornell University monetary expert, was on the afternoon program. Earlier, Edward A. O'Neal, president of the federation, told the gathering credit rates and terms to farmers should be liberalized, that agriculture should be relieved of its "inequitable tax burden" and that "inequalities" resulting from the tariff structure and the monetary system should be corrected.

Introducing President Roosevelt, O'Neal said into the telephone: "Hello, Mr. Roosevelt."

"Hello, Edward," came the Executive's response through loudspeakers, "it's good to hear your voice again."

Early Christmas Rush Brings 25 Per Cent Gain in D. C. Sales

The jangle of new money mingled with the jingle of Christmas bells in Washington yesterday as announcement came from Chicago that the Capital's Yuletide shopping this year was 25 per cent ahead of the corresponding week a year ago.

Source of this information, which was confirmed by District merchants and commercial organizations, was a survey conducted in Chicago for the country in general. The survey indicated Washington's gain led the Nation.

As department store cash registers rang and District coffers filled with money, officials pointed out that the number of Government workers, now 92,000, as against 64,000 a year ago, is to a large extent responsible for the trade boom.

"Business conditions here this holiday season are almost as good as in 1929," said Louis Rothschild, head of the Washington Better Business Bureau.

"They are gratifying in the extreme to everyone. Washington is an extremely prosperous city."

Toy stores were thronged yesterday, as were haberdashery concerns, tailoring establishments and department stores of all kinds.

"We are very much pleased with the results of the season so far," asserted Edward D. Shaw, of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

Artillery Officer Dies Of Injuries in Crash

Fort Benning, Ga., Dec. 10 (AP).—Lieut. Edward F. Benson, Eighty-third Field Artillery, died in the post hospital here today from injuries received early Saturday in an automobile accident.

Corpl. J. M. Smith, a passenger in the officer's car, was killed as the machine left the road and crashed into a tree on the reservation. Lieut. Benson was from Rochester, N. H., and Smith was from Villa Rica, Ga.

Urges Coordination of All Agencies for Enforcement.

Aim of Conference Told by Cummings

'We Can Do This Job if People Want It,' He Declares.

President Roosevelt last night urged coordination of all crime-preventing and law-enforcing agencies in the country—those of the Federal Government, the forty-eight States, and the counties, cities and towns.

He then called on the people of the country to get behind a sustained war on crime in America.

Addressing 500 police chiefs, prison officials, lawyers, judges, newspaper editors and legislators, gathered in Constitution Hall for the opening of a national conference on crime, President Roosevelt said:

"I want the backing of every man, every woman and every adolescent child in every State in the United States and in every county of every State—their backing for what you and the officers of law and order are trying to accomplish."

Launches Great Crime Drive.

With last night's speech, President Roosevelt threw the prestige of his office and the power of his personality behind what promises to be the greatest assault on crime the United States has ever known.

In calling on the people of the country to back up law-enforcement officers from the attorney general down to the town constable, President Roosevelt regretfully admitted that public opinion "is not in this day and age sufficiently active and alive" to the situation that exists.

Not only has there been a lack of public support and understanding the President said, but in many instances bandits have been better equipped and better organized than the officials who were trying to run them down.

"This is particularly true," he said, "because of the lack of coordination between local agencies with the States."

Urges Wide Cooperation.

The task of the crime conference, President Roosevelt said, was twofold:

1. To erect and maintain a constantly improving administrative structure, one that will tie together every crime-preventing, law-enforcing agency of every branch of the Government—the Federal Government, the 48 State governments and all of the local governments, including counties, cities and towns.

2. To interpret the problem of crime to the people of the country, bringing to their attention crime as a whole—great crimes, lesser crimes and little crimes—to the end that public opinion will be built up and arrayed against the lawless.

There were three other speakers, Attorney General Cummings and two members of the Hoover Cabinet—former Secretary of War Patrick Hurley and former Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson. The presence of the latter emphasized the nonpartisan character of the conference.

Cummings Stresses Action.

Attorney General Cummings outlined the purposes of the conference and expressed the hope that it would be the most successful of its kind ever held.

"There is one point which I most emphatically wish to stress," he said, "namely, that it is not intended that this conference shall meet, discuss, adjourn and be forgotten.

"Nor is it intended that its sole product shall be a product of pious resolutions. What we want are con-

Big Firms Vote Higher Salaries To Executives

Boosts of as Much as 200 Per Cent Revealed in Reports to U. S.

Salary increases of as high as 200 per cent have been voted this year by some large corporations, statements filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission disclosed yesterday.

News of an apparent trend toward higher pay for executives of private companies was expected to lead to Congressional demands for legislative limitation of salaries. Observers recalled sharp reduction in the income of railroad presidents obtained by the RFC when the lines applied for loans.

T. M. Girdler, Republic Steel Corporation president, topped the list with a 1934 salary of $129,372, a raise of $11,952 over last year. Perhaps the biggest increase was credited to Daniel K. Weiskopf, a vice president of National Distillers Products Corporation, with 1934 compensation of $47,286, compared with $15,640 in 1933.

Securities Commission officials told the Associated Press the pay data received so far included only recently organized corporations and old-line companies which have floated new issues. One commission member said the Government had no desire to "snoop" and would learn the income only of a few ranking executives of large corporations.

Seton Porter, president of National Distillers, $75,620 this year and $51,660 last; Otto H. Watkins, vice president, $43,593 against $21,456; Arthur Loasby, vice president, $32,740 instead of $11,073.

The income of officials of Republic Steel Corporation in addition to Mr. Girdler included B. F. Fairless and R. J. Wysor, vice presidents, $64,692 this year, compared with $58,713 in 1933.

Mathieson Alkali Works: E. M. Allen, president, $86,740 in both 1933 and 1934.

Gets $18,000 Increase.

Monarch Fire Insurance Co.: Ralph Rawlings, president, received $18,000 in both 1933 and 1934; F. J. Greer, vice president, advanced from $5,000 to $8,000.

Philadelphia Brewing Co.: Joseph A. Slattery, president, $24,000 in both years; Martin C. Norton, vice president, raised from $7,875 to $10,400.

Chesapeake Corporation: D. S. Barrett, jr., and C. L. Bradley, administrative officers, $32,936 this year, representing small increases over 1933.

Edison Electric Illuminating Co. of Boston: Walter C. Baylies, president, $32,400; Thomas K. Cummings, tresaurer, and Sidney Hosmer, general manager, $20,700 each, and Leavitt L. Edgar, vice president, $18,000; all unchanged.

Northern States Power of Minnesota: T. D. Crocker, vice president, $17,100 in 1934, against $17,060; J. J. Molyneaux, treasurer, $16,250, against $16,210; H. E. Young, vice president, $12,000, against $11,960. Robert F. Pack president, apparently received only directors' fees of $100 in both years.

San Jose Water Works: H. S. Kittredge, president, $11,475 in 1934, compared with $10,923 in 1933.

Aircraft Firm's Pay Given.

United Aircraft Corporation: Donald L. Brown, president, $45,000; Eugene Wilson, vice president, $32,400; George S. Wheat, vice president, and Joseph F. McCarthy, secretary, $22,500 each. (These are 1934 salaries. Firm nonexistent in 1933).

Bridgeport Brass Co.: $29,928 in 1934, against $19,038.60 in 1933; W. R. Webster, board chairman, $9,000, against $7,967.89; Burgoyne Hamilton, treasurer, $3,975, against $2,520; H. H. Steinkraus, vice president, $2,300, against $13,641.68.

New England Grain Products Co.: Charles M. Cox, president, $20,000 and a share in profits above $675,000 for 1934, against $30,993.02 in 1933.

Millionaire Wins Custody of Boy, 6, As Mother Weeps

Oklahoma City, Dec. 10 (AP).—A 6-year-old boy of a disrupted family was tossed into the lap of luxury today.

Judge George A. Henshaw brushed aside legal complications and gave custody of the youngster, Jackie Gordy, to a millionaire family, over the tearful protests of the boy's 27-year-old mother, Mrs. Lorene Gordy.

The case reached its dramatic climax after the State summed up its charges of abandonment of the boy, filed against John Gordy, an unemployed driller divorced from the mother of Jackie.

Jackie left with the Halliburtons tonight for Duncan, Okla. Charges against the father will be dismissed, authorities said.

Between You and Me

By Raymond Clapper

Any impression given in this column yesterday that Senator Charles L. McNary, Republican leader of the Senate, would have his party abdicate its function of opposition was untintended and unfair to him.

Senator McNary does not believe the Republican membership in the Senate should obstruct legislation or prolong the session, but he does believe that all Administration measures should be thoroughly scrutinized and firmly opposed when judged to be contrary to the public welfare. That is the course he pursued last winter and is the one he expects to pursue in the coming session.

When the 23 House members from Pennsylvania, the second largest Democratic delegation in the House, swung in behind Representative Joseph W. Byrns yesterday, they just about put the Speakership in the bag for him.

One story is that Senator-elect Joseph F. Guffey, the first Democratic boss Pennsylvania has sent to Washington, had hope of holding back this block of votes as bargaining bait on Capitol Hill. He says not. The delegation apparently preferred to start the bandwagon instead of climbing on later.

The RFC is reexamining all previously rejected applications for credit under the loans to industries act with a view of ascertaining whether, under a slightly more liberal construction of its authority, meritorious requests which were turned down on first scrutiny might be granted now.

Out of a fund of $300,000,000 appropriated for such loans, the RFC has approved applications totaling $26,000,000, of which slightly more than $4,000,000 actually has been disbursed. That's not much of a pump primer for industry and some Senators and Representatives are disappointed that more money did not go out. However, the RFC has felt bound to be conservative in making such loans because the law requires that they be "adequately secured." Of late it has loosened up somewhat, which accounts for the current recheck of applications rejected earlier. In all, some 3,000 applications have been received, of which 446 were approved.

An interdepartmental committee headed by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau is acting as a clearing house for suggestions concerning prospective banking legislation, but if he has anything to say about it there will be a minimum of recommendations. The less banking legislation the better, in his opinion, until changes already made have been given a thorough trial. Among some proposals that may be made, however, if Congress asks for recommendations, is likely to be one to consolidate bank examination work, which is now scattered, partially duplicated by several agencies, including the Federal Reserve Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the RFC.

Indiana Democratic Representatives have won out over Gov. Paul McNutt in a patronage fight for some 800 or 900 farm census jobs along the banks of the Wabash. When Gov. McNutt sent a list of recommendations to the White House, shrieks of anguish began to come from the Representatives. After all, they had voted the jobs and ought to be allowed to fill them. This package of woe was tossed over to Secretary of Commerce Roper, in whose department the Census Bureau is located. Roper decided he would rather have one disappointed Governor far away in Indiana than nearly a dozen angry Representatives within barking distance in Washington. The Representatives will name the jobholders.

Former Senator George Moses, of New Hampshire, isn't doing much of anything now, since the business of Old Guarding went sour, but he says that for 30 cents he'd join Senator Borah's Young Republicans. He figures that he qualifies under the age limit, considering that Borah is dean of the Senate in length of service. With Moses it's just a question of getting the 30 cents. He's trying to induce former Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana, to go in with him.

White House newspaper correspondents have organized the "Backstairs Club." There are no dues and membership is restricted to prominent officials who, after conferring with President Roosevelt, slip out of the Executive offices through one of the numerous rear exits where they will not be observed.

Secretary of War Dern is the first member to be elected. That was the day Mr. Roosevelt returned from Warm Springs. Secretary of State Hull made the "Backstairs Club" Saturday, and Chairman Doughton, of the House Ways and Means Committee, qualified yesterday.

to a Mexican general "to make his life more pleasant and reform the new law on ammunition, arms, etc."

From Honduras, Remington had a communication saying its agent was working through a wealthy citizen who "always gets permits because he advances money to public officials, including the president himself."

Earlier, evidence disclosed "commissions" paid by the Du Pont company in China, which officials of that firm conceded were bribes. K. K. V. Casey, sales manager, took full responsibility and said the directors of the company had no knowledge of the incident.

Senator Barbour (Republican), New Jersey, took charge of the American phase of the inquiry yesterday, reading the numerous letters, then questioning officials of the two companies concerning them. They consistently maintained that these were the acts of agents working on commission, and that the companies themselves advanced no money to cover the payments.

Author of Letter.

When the description of a payment to the Guatemalan Minister was reached, H. F. Beebe, president of Winchester, called the committee's attention to the fact that the author of the letter recounting it, E. E. Jones, was present and ready to explain it.

Jonas strode forward, stocky, youthful, and responded to the questions of the committee members without hesitation. His brother, Frank S. Jonas, a South American agent for Remington, was a witness before the committee at its September hearings.

"I was a friend of Gen. Padilla when he became minister of war," Jonas told the committee. He added that Padilla had "made it easy" for him to obtain permits for bringing sporting arms into Guatemala. After one favor that Padilla did for him, he continued, the general suggested a "present."

"I gave him $250," he said, "in that instance, and on practically all imports permits for private firms—not government orders—I gave him something."

"He seems to have been a sort of petty larceny grafter," observed Senator Clark (Democrat), Missouri.

"Small Graft."

The letter mentioning the State Department was written in 1928 by F. J. Monaghan, of Remington. In the case of a transaction in Santo Domingo he said he had visited the State Department and been told that, while it was willing to overlook "small graft," this was going "too far."

"When we approached the State Department," the Monaghan letter said, "they admitted knowing something of the deal, but were glad to get the additional information we had obtained. They sent a copy of our letter giving the full facts to our minister at Santo Domingo.

"They are willing to shut their eyes to small graft on such transactions in Latin-American countries but they felt this was going too far, especially as the Dominican Republic still has a lot of unsettled American claims."

Bribery in Orient.

A general discussion of bribery in the Orient came as a prelude to the disclosure of the Du Pont graft payment in China.

"Graft is an accepted thing," said Felix du Pont, speaking of the Far East. "Foreign countries simply could not do business unless they adhered to the custom.

"We are not so much concerned with bribes as with what they lead to," said Nye. "Don't you feel bribery robs Government officials of any feeling of moral independence?"

Du Pont replied that his concern had had but negligible success in its foreign business and blamed European competition. On occasion, he added, the Du Ponts withdrew from countries where it strongly disapproved of the accepted way of doing business.

Then came the revelation of payments of "commissions" which Casey conceded were in the nature of bribes, to a Col. de Fremary, a Dutch officer working under contract with the Chinese government and to "Chinese army, Nanking."

"Old Chinese Custom."

"It's an old Chinese custom," said Casey, adding, however, that he was the only company official who knew of the payments in question. He said he accepted complete responsibility for "violating" company policy. If he had reported the incident to the directors of the company, he explained, they would have stopped all other sales.

A sale of 1,000 tons of smokeless powder to Poland was accompanied by the payment of a 7 per cent commission, or $126,000, to a du Pont agent named only at Klawe. The du Ponts asserted there was no evidence the money was advanced to him for payment to anyone else.

The day's session began with the presentation of a 12-year-old letter from the du Pont files, which intrigued the interest of the committee to the point of extensive questioning.

Letter From Paris.

The communication, written by the company's Paris representative, Col. William N. Taylor, intimated graft was so necessary to the sale of munitions in the Balkans that Vickers, Ltd., British firm, was going about it with the help of an intermediary such as Sir Basil Zaharoff.

British and German companies were successful in that section, Taylor said, because they understood conditions and were ready to resort to necessary expediencies. The du Ponts quickly countered by producing the minutes of a company executive committee meeting showing a refusal to accept Taylor's recommendations that the firm do likewise.

'Inflationless' Bonus Payment Will Be Pushed

Currency Expansion Plan Is Dropped in Drive to Win Passage.

Three weeks in advance of the opening of Congress, House bonus advocates have conducted a painless operation on the $3,200,000,000 cash payment bill, in an effort to remove "inflation" features, it was learned last night.

The bonus measure, which will be offered as "House Bill No. 1" by Representative Wright Patman, of Texas, will eliminate compulsory currency expansion and leave that question up to the Treasury, Patman said last night.

Meantime, it was learned that the White House favors no "compromise" of any sort on the bonus, and is preparing for a die-hard fight to prevent overriding of the certain White House veto, if the bill passes both Houses.

Patman Is Confident.

There has been much compromise talk recently on Capitol Hill, but it was said none of this emanates from the White House. Not only is the President opposed 100 per cent to cash payment, but he plans to keep Congress in session if the bill is passed, to provide additional appropriations and taxes he thinks necessary to finance it on a "sound" basis.

The bonus bloc in the House, led by Patman, is just as emphatically opposed to a "compromise." The Texas believes he has enough votes in the House to carry the measure without concessions.

"The time to talk compromise is when the bill has passed both House and Senate, and goes to conference for settlement of differences," Patman said.

Compromise Proposals.

Compromise proposals range from a suggestion by Chairman James P. Buchanan, of the House Appropriations Committee, that only veterans on relief rolls be awarded cash payments, to a plan of Senator Frederick Steiwer, of Oregon, to pay the bonus in yearly installments.

The anti-inflation clause written into the Patman bill would give the Treasury authority to withdraw Federal Reserve notes and national bank currency in an amount equal to bonus payments, if necessary to protect the commodity price level and prevent undue expansion, Patman said.

Under his plan, the bonus would be paid in new bank notes that could not be recalled from circulation. The Texan declared he personally prefers the expansion method, but is willing to make this change in an effort to render the measure more acceptable to the Administration.

Trade Gain Called Vital to Farmers dress, the Chief Executive told his listeners:

"You and I know that the year now ending has been one of significant accomplishment for agriculture. Despite the worst drought of record, farm income is running about $1,000,000,000 above last year.

"All of us would like to see an even larger increase in 1935, but we know that this can not come unless, in the first place, industrial production increases sufficiently to expand the market for farm products; unless, in the second place, more of our export trade is paid for by increased imports, and unless, in the third place, agriculture continues to adjust its total production to the market that actually exists.

"To fulfill these three requirements, I ask a continuation of the splendid support you have so unselfishly given in the past."

Secretary Hull, advocating abolition of "excessive artificial obstructions" to international trade, said in his prepared address that the Federal trade agreements act "offers us the opportunity to get the full benefit of expanded exports in return for the admission of larger imports."

"In the present low state of agricultural prices and of world trade," the State Department head continued, "it is especially important to develop foreign trade, for foreign markets alone can take all our agricultural surpluses." He continued:

"We must act unitedly and not permit relatively unimportant special, or notoriously inefficient or uneconomical industries to secure that degree of protection which, though gainful to a particular unit, is patently damaging to the country at large, and particularly to agriculture, which, geared to an export business on a large scale, has been brought well-nigh to ruin by the destruction of world trade. * * *

"Excessive tariffs and some of their more vicious offspring in the form of quotas, license arrangements, prohibitions and exchange controls are now working greater injury to agriculture than ever before."

Dr. Warren, speaking on "The Monetary Situation," said that "violent fluctuations in the value of gold are world wide."

Henderson and Angell, Britons, Awarded Nobel Peace Prizes

Members of Labor Party Long Have Worked to Outlaw War.

Oslo, Norway, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—The Nobel Peace Prizes for 1933 and 1934 today went to two Englishmen.

Arthur Henderson, British president of the World Disarmament Conference, received this year's award, while Sir Norman Angell, British author and lecturer, was awarded last year's prize.

Speaking for the Noble committee, Dr. Christian Lange declared Henderson "worked for the accomplishment of peace," while Angell "prepared the work." Both are members of the British Labor Party, Henderson being a leader of the right wing. Angell has served in the House of Commons.

Rejects Thought of Failure.

Henderson in accepting the award issued a call for disarmament, rejecting all thought of failure.

"The day when hopes of the disarmament conference cease to exist would be a sad day for the world," he said. "The word failure must have no place in the vocabulary of countries."

Angell was not present, declaring that attendance at the prize distribution would "interfere with his work for peace." His prize was received in his behalf by the British minister here.

Beginning life as an ironmolder at Newcastle, Henderson rose as a labor leader until he was a member of the war cabinet, and later home secretary in the first labor ministry. In the second labor cabinet, from 1929 to 1931, he was foreign minister.

Fought for the Conference.

The following year he became president of the World Disarmament Conference, and has led a stolid fight for its success against almost insurmountable obstacles.

Angell began his work for peace 40 years ago as a boy in California, where he went after a private education in England. He spent much time ranching and prospecting and was a reporter on American newspapers.

Stockholm, Sweden, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—King Gustav distributed the Nobel peace prizes in medicine, chemistry and literature here today.

The medicine award went to three Americans: Dr. George R. Minot and Dr. William P. Murphy, of Boston, and Dr. George H. Whipple, of Rochester. United States Ambassador Laurence E. Steinhardt accepted the chemical prize on behalf of Prof. Harold C. Urey, of New York.

The literary award was accepted by Luigi Pirandello, of Italy.

U. S. Put on Carpet for Code Administration by High Court vision inadvertently was omitted from the document signed by the President.

This fact was not discovered, however, until September, 1934, when the missing paragraph was reinserted into a code signed by the President. Meanwhile copies of what purported to be the code were printed bearing the omitted language.

It was a reference to this incident by F. W. Fischer, counsel for the oil companies, that caused the court to recall Mr. Stephens and question him regarding details of publication of NRA executive orders and codes.

Viciousness Is Charged.

Mr. Fischer, a Tyler, Tex., lawyer whose frontier manner of speech and gesture was reminiscent of Yancy Cravat in "Cimarron," told the court that the case before it went far beyond the question of oil production. He added that the "viciousness of governing folks by executive order" was demonstrated by the Smith case.

"Smith was arrested, indicted and held in jail for several days and then had to put up bond for violating a law that did not exist, but nobody knew it," the attorney asserted.

In reply to a question, Mr. Fischer said he had not been able to obtain a true copy of the petroleum code or regulations. He said the only copy he had ever seen was "the hip pocket of an agent sent down to Texas from Washington."

"Are the facts recited in connection with this code applicable in general to the other codes?" asked Justice Louis D. Braideis.

"You'll have to ask the Attorney General," replied the Texan.

Mr. Stephens, who had completed his argument, arose and Justice Brandeis asked him the question.

"I think that is so," Mr. Stephens replied.

No Official Publication.

"Who promulgates these orders and codes that have the force of laws?" asked the justice.

"They are promulgated by the President and I assume they are on record at the State Department," he replied.

"Is there any official or general publication of these executive orders?" Justice Brandeis continued.

"Not that I know of," replied Mr. Stephens.

"Well, is there any way by which one can find out what is in these executive orders when they are issued?"

"I think it would be rather difficult, but it is possible to get certified copies of the executive orders and codes from the NRA," Mr. Stephens explained.

"And that advantage is open to the staff of the Justice Department?" asked Justice Willis Van Devanter.

"Yes, sir," Mr. Stephens replied as a titter swept the room.

"How many of these orders and codes have been issued in the last fifteen months—several thousand?" asked Justice James Clark McReynolds, who earlier had quizzed Mr. Stephens about the omitted provision of the code.

"I am not certain, Your Honor, but I should say several hundred," the attorney replied.

Stephens Questioned Sharply.

Earlier Mr. Stephens was questioned sharply by various members of the court, especially Justice Brandies, regarding the authority of Congress to delegate to the President power to prohibit from interstate shipment oil produced in excess of the State quotas. Several of the justices contended this section of the law established no criterion to guide the President.

Mr. Stephens conceded that, but argued that the section in question had to be read with the entire act in mind. The policy established in the act was the removal of obstructions to the free flow of interstate commerce and provision for the general welfare. He argued that unrestrained oil production caused ruinous prices and unduly hampered interstate commerce.

Park Savings Suit Dismissal Asked by RFC

Counsel Files Answer to Action Brought by Depositors' Group.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation yesterday asked the District Supreme Court to dismiss a suit brought by a group of depositors and creditors of the closed Park Savings Bank to compel an accounting of loans made to the bank shortly prior to its closing.

Cora G. Windmuller, a depositor in the bank, filed the suit. She complained that because the bank's charter had expired in August, 1929, the officers of the institution had no right to carry on the banking business to its collapse in March, 1933. Likewise, she contended the RFC had no right to accept from the bank a large block of securities in return for loans.

The loans, she charged, were "wasted" by the bank and were never used for the benefit of the creditors and depositors, on whom fell a loss of approximately $2,250,000. Most of this loss was brought about by the defalcations of Robert S. Stunz, executive officer, who committed suicide a few days before the Treasury Department closed the bank.

In asking dismissal, William C. Fitts, general counsel for the RFC, said that because the Parks Savings continued to do a general banking business after its charter expired, it was in fact a banking corporation, over which a responsible board of directors held sway, and which was entitled to borrow from the RFC on securities supposedly belonging to it.

He further asserted that even though the bank was chartered in Alabama it was responsible to Federal control because it operated wholly within the District of Columbia.

New Work Plan Must Be Begun, Mayors Plead

Winter Relief Rolls May Carry 23,000,000, They Warn Ickes.

(Associated Press.)

A warning that 23,000,000 persons would be on relief this winter if a new public works program was not launched immediately was handed to the Federal Government yesterday by the National Conference of Mayors.

A delegation headed by Mayor Daniel W. Hoan, of Milwaukee, president of the conference, carried to Secretary Ickes a plea for haste in PWA and housing projects as "the best means and aid to recovery."

The mayors will go directly to Congress with their demands for continuation of public works "if the Administration does not propose a PWA program," Paul Bettors, secretary of the conference, said.

Unanimous Accord.

The conference was unanimously agreed that a revitalized construction program was essential to prevent trouble in industrial centers this winter, Hoan said.

Hoan was accompanied by Henry Worley, Mayor of Columbus, Ohio; T. Semmes Walmsley, Mayor of New Orleans, and Bettors.

"We came here to tell the Federal Government what would happen if it does not do something," Hoan said.

Hoan said the delegation would protest to Relief Administrator Hopkins against what he called unjustifiably high construction costs on housing. Prices of building materials were so high, Hoan said, that "anybody is plain crazy to build anything now."

Walmsley Confers.

Walmsley said he did not discuss with Ickes a public works ban on additional allotments and payments to Louisiana for public works pending a study of legislation passed at a special session of the State Legislature.

He added that he wanted to take up with officials the status of a $2,500,000 sewage, drainage and water project about which there is some difficulty in connection with bonds. He wants to check also the status of a proposed $700,000 French market development.

Rep. Norton Favors Legal Gaming Here

Doesn't Favor Gambling.

"I don't favor gambling. If it were possible to stamp it out, I would be in favor of legislation to achieve that end.

"But I am a realist. I believe that when you are faced with an actual situation, there is no use in trying to camouflage it. If prohibition taught us anything, it certainly taught us that the only way to correct a situation was to face the facts.

"And so I say, let's regulate gambling, let's bring it into the open under proper safeguards and under strict Government regulations. Then we may escape the evils that grew out of the speakeasy."

Has Evolved No Plan.

Mrs. Norton said that she had not worked out any plan for legalized gambling. Thus far, she said, she had simply convinced herself that this was the solution of a problem as old as liquor.

In the last Congress, the House passed a bill which would legalize horse racing in the District. Mrs. Norton said she thought the city might well go further and legalize properly conducted gambling houses.

"I suppose that sounds revolutionary," she concluded, "but that's the way I feel about it."

Mrs. Norton came here to attend the national crime conference, which opened last night in Constitution Hall.

'Domestic Killings' Lead Chicago Slayings

Chicago, Dec. 10 (AP).—What really runs up Chicago's murder score is the habit husbands and wives have of killing each other.

This kind of behavior accounted for far more of the homicides of 1934, which were tabulated by the police department today, than gang killings did. The police called them "domestic killings," and listed 47 of them. Gangsters put only 28 on the [illegible].

Capital Gets Snow, Cold Sweeps East

Miami experienced one of its rare frosts, and the Carolinas shivered.

The Weather Bureau said reports indicated the principal low barometer was over western North Carolina, and this meant colder weather south of there.

Atlanta faced the prospects of a 22-degree freeze.

Minor Crashes Mark Storm.

Scores of minor automobile accidents were reported by police. Fenders bumped and cars skidded on snow-glazed streets. Late yesterday none of the mishaps reported was serious, for no one was injured and damages were negligible.

Thousands of Christmas shoppers jostled each other in the downtown districts, motivated by weather conditions symbolic of the "good, old-fashioned" Yuletide.

Traffic was slowed to the crawling point on downtown streets, where drivers virtually "felt their way" to avoid mishaps.

Early yesterday 24 extra policemen were detailed to clear up traffic snarls and help pedestrians.

In the suburbs, when the school day had ended, children tested their sleds, hidden away since last year, or wandered in little groups to the Zoo, where they watched the antics of the polar bears in their own element, thanks to the wintry weather.

Virginia's highways early in the morning quickly became ice covered, and a truck loaded with beer skidded and overturned on "Snake Hill," near Alexandria, on the Richmond highway. Broken bottles and "refreshments" littered the road while motorists went into ditches and skidded on the highway in avoiding the truck. Police were hard put to straighten out the tangle which completely blocked the highway. No one was injured, however.

Three Tip Over in Car.

On the Lee-Jackson highway, at Lincolnia, Mrs. H. B. Godfred, Gainesville; Mrs. Dorothy Gott, Oakton, and Miss Melissa Godfrey, Manassas, in a southbound car, skidded and left the road, going down an embankment. Their automobile overturned and other motorists took them to the Alexandria Hospital to be treated for cuts and bruises.

Other Injuries.

Others injured in the city yesterday included:

Norman Dorcy, colored, 19, Simpsonville, Md. whose automobile skidded into a trolley pole at Georgia avenue and Geranium street. He was taken to Freedmen's Hospital suffering from head injuries and severe lacerations.

Florence Jackson colored, 44, 819 Twenty-second street northwest, fell at Thirty-first and M streets and suffered a probable fracture of the left shoulder. She is in Emergency Hospital.

Mary Moore, colored, 36, of 523 Third street southwest, fell at Third and F streets southwest and probably fractured her left leg. Police took her to Casualty Hospital.

Stephen Bransgrove Dismissed, First in History of Association.

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Charging him with copying the works of other artists and exhibiting them as his own, the National Academy of Design tonight announced the expulsion of Stephen Bransgrove from associate membership.

In making the announcement, Jonas Lie, president of the academy, said Bransgrove was expelled "for conduct considered prejudicial to the academy."

"It is with regret," his announcement added, "that the National Academy finds it necessary to make public this first expulsion since its founding in 1826, but it considers it a duty to itself and a warning to others to make this action public."

The specific charge on which the expulsion order was based, Lie said, was contained in the following paragraph of a resolution adopted by the academy's council:

"In causing to be exhibited at the 1934 exhibition of National Academy of Design the painting entitled, 'Easy Heights,' at the same time falsely representing to the jury of selection that it was an original work of art created by himself, whereas, in truth and in fact, it was a copy of a painting entitled, 'On the Moors,' painted by one M. Septimus Power, and theretofore exhibited in the National Art Gallery of New South Wales in Sydney, Australia."

A "memorandum of facts" accompanying the announcement stated that Bransgrove was elected associate member in the spring of 1933, after a painting assertedly entered by him had won the Ellen Speyer prize of $300. Bransgrove, said the council's resolution, "falsely" represented the painting to be an original work of art created by himself.

Locked in Vault, Jeweler Tackles Gem of Problem

Chicago, Dec. 10 (AP).—Locked in an armored vault with a fortune in emeralds on a tray before him, Warren Piper, expert jeweler, puzzled over a strange problem in mathematics today.

It was his job to divide 39 Cabochon stones—from a necklace worth somewhere between $350,000 and $1,750,000—so that 11 heirs will receive a fair share.

Who owned the glorious gems Piper wouldn't say; he was given the commission, he said, on the promise that this would not be disclosed. Executors of a wealthy person's estate ordered him to divide the necklace when the 11 who will share in it couldn't agree among themselves.

The stones weigh 350 carats, so that the 39 must be divided into shares of 31.8 carats each.

Many Lines Seen Unable to Meet Increased Cost of Operation.

By Harris B. Hull.

A ruling that virtually assures another revamping of the American air-mail map has been delivered at the Postoffice Department by Solicitor Karl A. Crowley, who has stated that an independent operator must pay pilots the existing National Labor Board's wage scale.

The opinion was given in the case of Long & Harmon, Inc., operators of an air-amil line between Amarillo and Brownsville, Tex. It is a foregone conclusion that the important decision will be applicable to all other companies, many of whom received new air-mail contracts early this year.

Many observers feel that a number of the smaller independent companies will not be able to stand the increased operating cost, and will be required to consolidate or surrender their air-mail contracts, thus bringing about another realignment of the air-mail system. Of the 16 companies carrying air mail at the present time 5 are reported to be paying the prevailing scale.

Scale for Pilots Fixed.

The National Labor Board's scale for pilots provides that they shall fly not more than 85 hours a month and be paid roughly 7.5 cents a mile. This develops a salary between $550 and $700 a month, depending upon the total hours flown, weather conditions and the speed of the airplane used. This figure is the equivalent of the salaries paid by the major operators in the past.

Following the cancellation of the air mail contracts, however, a number of new companies submitted bids for the business considerably below the bids of the companies that had been flying the mail. A number of these so-called "independent operators" drew up their estimates figuring that they would not be obliged to pay their flying personnel the salaries then paid, which they felt were too high.

These companies established salary scales on a different basis, paying pilots in the vicinity of $250 to $400 a month. The Air Line Pilots' Association immediately protested, but until Crowley's decision was rendered had been unable to get a favorable ruling.

Refused to Raise Pay.

Later, following the passage of the new air-mail law, the contracts held by these companies were extended. The companies, however, did not raise their scales, stating that they did not feel that provisions of the law were applicable to the bids they had originally submitted.

Solicitor Crowley's decision, which gives Long and Harmon until January 1 to start paying the Labor Board's scale on penalty of cancellation of the contract on January 15, has reversed this.

In making the decision, Crowley quoted President Roosevelt's letter to the chairmen of the Committees on Postoffices and Post Roads when air-mail legislation was considered.

The President wrote:

"Public safety calls for pilots of high character and great skill. The occupation is a hazardous one. Therefore the law should provide for a method to fix maximum flying hours, minimum pay and a system of retirement or annuity benefits."

Takes Up Compensation.

The Postoffice solicitor also wrote in his decision:

"Thus, it is clear that the President and the Congress intended to enact legislation which would maintain wage levels of pilots, mechanics and laborers to a comparable status with that theretofore obtaining in the industry, and to avoid the possibility of leaving the labor cost a matter for speculation in fixing bids by air-mail operators.

"It may be granted that the operation of the new air-mail law has resulted in far superior service and a saving to the department of many millions of dollars, but it was not the intention of the President or Congress to accomplish such savings through contracts based upon bids having in contemplation profits to the bidders based upon speculation with respect to labor costs."

McNinch Flays Moves to Balk TVA Program

Urges Utilities to Support Plan, Take Advantage of Its Returns.

The nation-wide "barrage of propaganda," which is estimated to have cost the public utility industry between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000 annually, has not only failed in its purpose, but has "solidified the support of the people" behind the President's power program, Frank R. McNinch, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, said last night in a radio talk.

The people knew, he said, "that behind the smoke-screen of 'poor widows and orphans' stood their tearful and valiant defenders, those entrenched financiers, who have been reaping millions where they have not sown."

Right Beyond Question.

Referring to reports that the Edison Electric Institute has employed Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, and James M. Beck, former constitutional authority in the House, to attack the validity of the Tennessee Valley Authority, McNinch said:

"The legal right to pursue such course is beyond question. The wisdom of thus challenging the combined judgment of the Congress and the Chief Executive, directed toward economic recovery and the permanent weal of our citizenship may well be the subject of calm and patriotic consideration before decision.

"Recognizing, as I do, the great importance to our national welfare of a soundly based prosperity for the power industry, I indulge the hope that plans for obstruction may give way to measures of cooperation, that attack may be abandoned for support of the Government's power program.

U. S. Not to Retreat.

"But, if attack is made, let it be understood that there will be no retreat by Federal forces.

"The Government's program for vastly increased consumption at lower rates has opened a wide door of opportunity to the power industry. If it has the vision to see and bold enterprise to advance into this wider domain of public service, it will find there millions of new customers, as well as millions of old customers using more electricity."

McNich reminded the utility stockholders that they would have reaped greater profits had not the industry spent so many millions on "futile" propaganda.

$14,105,345,205, New High, Bulges In Nation's Purse

The supply of money for United States reached a new high of $14,105,345,205 at the end of November, the Associated Press reported yesterday.

Imports of approximately $130,000,000 in gold supplied most of the increase over October's figures of $13,919,395,014. During December the gold stock advanced another $31,000,000.

Most of the money stock was held in the Treasury and in Federal Reserve Banks. The coin in circulation, however, was $5,548,797,702 as compared with $5,453,335,407 at the end of October. The per capita circulation increased over this period from $43.05 to $43.78.

crete proposals for action; constructive suggestions as to why and how certain things should be done, and by whom. I have said before, and I say again, we can do this job if the people want it done."

Commenting on the need for better selection and training of personnel, Attorney General Cummings advocated a scientific and educational center that would be called an Institute of Criminology—a sort of West Point for the training of criminologists.

Stimson Decries U. S. Attitude.

Former Secretary of State Stimson, a noted lawyer, decried the Nation's mental attitude toward the Dillingers and the "Baby Face" Nelsons, an attitude which he blamed on the sensational press and the movies.

"Under these influences," he said, "we have become sentimental over crime to an hysterical degree which is largely responsible for the breakdown of our system of justice.

"I believe that if we could strip off this false glamour and sentimentality which has been permitted to grow up about crime, a long step would be taken to further justice. I have heard it humorously stated that the only kind of homicide which is really repugnant to the American nature is a legal execution for crime, pursuant to a duly imposed sentence of law."

Reputable statistics, Stimson said, show that the American homicide rate is 20 times as high as that of England.

Cites Lack of Punishment.

One reason for this, he said, was racial, but another reason, and an important one, was the inefficiency of the American legal machinery for punishment.

"Recent statistics indicate," Col. Stimson said, "that if you commit a burglary in the city of Chicago, your chances for not paying any penalty for your offense are as good as 200 to 1. Certainly no adventurous spirit would be deterred by such a danger."

The lack of coordination which President Roosevelt was to mention later was graphically illustrated in a story which Col. Stimson told about Boston and its environs. In this area, he said there are no less than 39 separate police units.

"If a criminal moves from one jurisdiction into another," he said, "an independent organization must be put into motion to apprehend him."

Hurley Urges Enforcement.

Former Secretary of War Hurley, who served as chairman of the reception committee, told the conference that the suppression of crime could best be achieved by enforcing local laws.

"If local laws were enforced," he said, "every racketeer would be stopped at the beginning of his career."

In advance of the conference yesterday the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People threatened to picket Memorial Continental Hall today because lynching has been made a topic on the agenda.

Told about this, Attorney General Cummings said that no specific crime had been listed as a topic; that crime in its entirety was to be considered. He explained that after each session—and there will be three every day—there will be a discussion period in which speakers can bring up any subject they choose.

"There is no taboo on any subject," Cummings said. "Anybody is free to bring up lynching, and I hope they do."

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, yesterday refused to grant a permit allowing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to picket the conference.

Governors Will Ask Freight-Rate Probe

Talmadge and Graves Aver South's Cost Highest.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 10 (AP).—Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia and Governor-elect Bibb Graves of Alabama moved today to secure "justice" for the South in the matter of freight rates.

They said they would call a conference of the governors and governors-elect of eight Southeastern States for December 19 in Birmingham to discuss "discrimination" against the South in freight rates, which, they said, were 27 per cent higher in the South than in other sections.

They will ask the governors to "march on Washington," call meetings of their various State delegations and "sell" the idea to them.

States asked to cooperate in the movement are North and South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi.

6 Witnesses Heard In Trunk Slaying

50 to Be Called in Killing of English Dancer.

Lewes, England, Dec. 10 (AP).—The first half dozen of the 50 persons upon whom the state is relying to convict Tony Mancini for the trunk murder of Mrs. Violette Kaye paraded to the witness stand today.

They sat in a packed courtroom facing a large black trunk in which the body of Mrs. Kaye, a professional dancer, was found last summer. Mancini, a waiter, is accused of killing her with a hammer.

His case is known as "Trunk Crime No. 2," and as such it has drawn curious crowds from far points in England. Mrs. Kaye's body was found jammed into the trunk in a Brighton lodging house. Besides the body were found the head and arms of another woman, known only as the victim of "Trunk Crime No. 1."

Text of Roosevelt Address At Crime Conference Here

During the past two years there have been uppermost in our minds the problems of feeding and clothing the destitute, making secure the foundations of our agricultural, industrial and financial structures, and releasing and directing with vital forces that make for a healthy national life. As a component part of the large objective we include our constant struggle to safeguard ourselves against the attacks of the lawless and the criminal elements of our population.

Relentlessly and without compromise the Department of Justice has moved forward in its major offensive against these forces. With increasing effectiveness, State and local agencies are directing their efforts toward the achievement of law enforcement; and with them, in more marked degree than ever before, the Federal Government has worked toward the common objective.

It is a privilege to pay tribute to the men and women who, in many capacities, official and otherwise, have contributed to our growing success. To a much greater extent than is generally realized our law enforcement officers throughout the country have rendered devoted, conscientious and effective service, often under exasperating and hazardous circumstances.

Bandits Better Equipped Than Officers of the Law.

Their effectiveness has, unfortunately, been impaired because of inadequate organization, unscientific administration and lack of public support and understanding. In many instances, we may as well frankly admit, bandits have been better equipped and better organized than have the officials who are supposed to keep them in check. This is particularly true because of the lack of coordination between local agencies within the States. It is, also, contributed to in serious measure by the lack of facilities for training skilled men for the work of detection, apprehension and prosecution of accused persons, and by similar lack of facilities for the study and supervision of certain types of criminals capable of rehabilitation.

It is important, too, that we recognize clearly the increasing scope and complexity of the problem of criminal law administration. Undoubtedly there are unfortunate aspects of our national life which seriously threaten the American home; increase the danger of juvenile delinquency and multiply offenses against the good order of society. The regulation of the illicit traffic in drugs, the prevention of commerce in stolen goods, and generally, the interstate character of offenses attributable to the roving criminal have presented national problems against which primitive forms of law enforcement are relatively powerless.

It is equally necessary that we realize the importance of common action all along the line—starting with crime prevention itself and carrying this common action all the way through to prosecution and punishment.

Prosecution and Judiciary Needs Also Are Pointed Out.

Effective detection of criminals may be rendered useless by ineffective prosecution or by unintelligent judicial disposition. Beneficent and promising procedures, such as probation and parole, may become actually sources of danger, if ignorantly or indifferently administered. So, too, reliance on mere repression can not take the place of intelligent training and guidance of youth.

We have come to a time when our need is to discover more fully and to direct more purposefully into useful channels that greatest of all natural resources, the genius of the younger generation. Crime is a symptom of social disorder. Widespread increase in capacity to substitute order for disorder is the remedy.

This can come only through expert service in marshaling the assets of home, school, church, community and other social agencies, to work in common purpose with our law enforcement agencies. We deceive ourselves when we fail to realize that it is an interrelated problem of immense difficulty. Scientific research, highly trained personnel, expert service are just as necessary here as in any field of human endeavor. To the extent that we provide, instead, unscientific methods, poorly trained personnel and hit-or-miss procedure, we may expect bungling, heartbreaking results.

I am delighted, therefore, that the Attorney General has called you together for this conference. The country knows that under his leadership we are getting better results than ever before.

Reassuring That Conference Has Been Called Together.

It is heartening and reassuring to the people of the United States that you have gathered here for this purpose. They are looking to you for guidance and intelligent leadership. They have a right to expect from you a constructive program of action in which they as individuals, and collectively as communities and organizations, may participate. It should be a challenge to you to respond to these expectations.

The task of this thoroughly representative conference is twofold.

First, I ask you to plan and to construct with scientific care a constantly improving administrative structure—a structure which will tie together every crime-preventing, law-enforcing agency of every branch of Government—the Federal Government, the forty-eight State governments and all of the local governments, including counties, cities and towns.

Your second task is of equal importance. An administrative structure that is perfect will still be ineffective in its results unless the people of the United States understand the larger purposes and cooperate with these purposes.

Wants Problem of Crime Interpreted to the People.

I ask you, therefore, to do all in your power to interpret the problem of crime to the people of this country. They must realize the many implications of that word "crime." It is not enough that they become interested in one phase only. At one moment popular resentment and anger may be roused by an outbreak of some particular form of crime such, for example, as widespread banditry; or at another moment, of appalling kidnapings; or at another of widespread drug peddling; or at another of horrifying lynchings.

It is your positive duty to keep before the country the facts in regard to crime as a whole—great crimes, lesser crimes and little crimes—to build up a body of public opinion which, I regret to be compelled to say, is not in this day and age sufficiently active or alive to the situation in which we find ourselves.

I want the backing of every man, every woman and every adolescent child in every State of the United States and in every county of every State—their backing for what you and the officers of law and order are trying to accomplish.

The sustained interest and assistance of the organizations here represented can become a public service of high significance in the social life of the Nation—a service to which the American people, I am confident, will not fail to respond.

Woman Faints At Her Hearing On Drug Count

Crying out against a prohibitive bond, Miss Lillian Camardo, 21, admitted drug addicts, collapsed yesterday after she told Needham C. Turnage, United States Commissioner:

"You are putting me where I'll suffer the tortures of hell—there's no such thing as a cure."

Miss Camardo, who was sent to the women's wing of the District Jail in default of $7,500 bond with the Commissioner's recommendation that she be given hospitalization, was one of five persons arraigned before Mr. Turnage yesterday and held in heavy bond for alleged violations of the Harrison narcotic act.

The hearing had scarcely begun when it was thrown into an uproar by the collapse of Miss Camardo, 31, who was arrested in a Twelfth street raid Saturday night. After being given restoratives she was revived and the hearing resumed. She was ordered held under bond for a hearing December 20.

John C. Callahan was held under bond of $5,000 for a hearing December 17 and Jimmy Barber was held under a $5,000 bond for a hearing on the same date. Eddy Young, whose hearing was fixed for December 18, was held in $4,000 bond.

The woman and Callahan, Barber and Young all were arrested in the Twelfth street raid, while Nasky Williams, the last one to be arraigned, was picked up on the street. His hearing was set for December 23, and his bond at $4,000.

DopeRound-up Wins Plaudits Of Morgenthau

'Swell Job,' He Declares as Arrests Mount to 791 With Mode Due.

As the Nation-wide Federal narcotic drive continued, but with lessening speed, Secretary Morgenthau last night characterized the work of his subordinates as a "swell job."

Arrests totaled 791 with more in prospect, and Harry J. Anslinger, chief of the narcotics division, predicted convictions in 95 per cent of the cases. Apprehensions will taper off, however, he said, consisting largely of follow-up charges.

"I am very much pleased," Secretary Morgenthau said after receiving Anslinger's report, which also disclosed that "more than half of those picked up have criminal records of all kinds, but as a rule are not definitely linked with the liquor traffic."

Lauds Cuban Liquor Ban.

The Secretary also expressed satisfaction with a decree issued by President Carlos Mendieta of Cuba prohibiting the shipment of Cuban alcohol to ports known as smuggling bases. The Treasury has been making a concerted drive against bootleggers since the repeal of prohibition.

An immediate result of the narcotics drive, Anslinger said, was to boost prices.

"The price of heroin locally has doubled as a result of the drive," he said.

The ordinary price for this drug is $1 a grain. But even at this price, Anslinger explained, huge profits are made by the dealers. A $20 ounce of heroin, he said, is retailed for as much as $400 after being adulterated at the ratio of 10 to 1.

Urges Special Wards.

The Federal narcotics chief not only wants new legislation to aid in rounding up dope peddlers but he believes establishment of special wards in county hospitals for the treatment of drug addicts would be extremely beneficial.

The week-end round-up was characterized by Anslinger as the decentralization of the drug traffic, which is done by interlocking gangs.

Large quantities of illicit drugs are passed from group to group after being imported at New York City, he said. Drugs seized in California have been found to have originated in New York.

Mostly Peddlers Seized.

Explaining that most arrests are of peddlers, rather than addicts, Anslinger said the drug users picked up in the drive will be eligible for admission to the special hospital which will be opened by the Government next March in Lexington, Ky.

More heroin than any other drug was taken during the drive.

"We believe it mostly comes from Bulgaria," Anslinger said. "European factories have reduced their output, and in 1932 President Kemal Pasha kicked them out of Turkey at the request of the United States."

He said 12 factories are known to be operating in Bulgaria, and these produced six tons of heroin last year. It was taken out of the country by airplanes.

Friend of Most Desperate Men In U. S. Here for Crime Parley

Warden Johnston Says He Doesn't Expect Trouble at Alcatraz.

Last week a slim, mild-mannered man, who looks like a banker, left his friends; 212 of the most desperate men in America, on the grim rock that is Alcatraz Island in San Francisco Bay, to bring his 20 years' experience with criminals to the National Conference on Crime here.

Yesterday afternoon, sitting quietly at one of the great walnut tables in the Department of Justice library, Warden James A. Johnston of Alcatraz Federal Prison munched the tiny triangular sandwiches served at the reception for the conference visitors and discussed his friends at Alcatraz.

This rudy-faced, gray-haired man whose spectacles do not mask his cool gray-brown eyes, has raised his three daughters in prisons. Two of them are married now, but Barbara Johnston, 17, the youngest, lives with her parents in a house 20 feet from the massive rocks of the Federal prison for the so-called "irredeemable" prisoners of the land, where Alphonse Capone, Machine Gun Kelly, Harvey Bailey, and other desperadoes live and work.

"Names Don't Matter."

"I must make clear to you my hearty accord with the Attorney General's attitude in not publicizing the names and doings of the men in the prison. Their names do not matter there," he said.

So references to Capone and the others were dropped. But he discussed freely the precautions that have made Alcatraz Prison the "escape-proof" institution where the country's "extra-hard muggs" are held. The Government refers to these men as "special disciplinary problems," and so does Warden Johnston.

"It would be exceedingly difficult to get away," he said. "For instance, what we call 'gun-detectors' have been installed at the entrance, which is the only gate out. These are sensitized magnets, which are adjusted to allow for all the steel and iron in the prison doors and bars. If any man passing through this area has even a small knife on him, not to say a gun of any size, a bell rings and a light is switched on. Then we can search the man.

"Further, the man stationed as turnkey at each of the four barred sectons of the entrance has control only over the inside gate of his section. The armorer, stationed in a bullet-proof tower room overlooking the sections, operates the next gate by remote control, so that no one can possibly pass through each of the doors without being passed by each man on duty and the armorer.

Illuminated at Night.

"All of the cell doors are operated by remote control. Flood lights switch on at night to illuminate every cranny of the prison.

"Outside the huge rock walls, the pathways to the shops are fenced with cyclone-wire, topped by a barbed-wire section, 11 feet high in all. On all possible parts of the rocky island beyond this fence are barbed-wire fences, zig-zagged.

"Then there is a 130-foot drop to the water, which is pretty cold, and a mile swim to San Francisco in the swift currents of the bay.

"No, I'm not worried particularly over escapes."

Warden Johnson believe firmly in the establishment of such prisons as that at Alcatraz for the incorrigibles or very dangerous men.

"Not from the standpoint of cruelty," he added. "The men are humanely treated at all times. But segregation of the 'repeaters,' the criminals who come back again and again, is most important in the reclamation of the young men who go to jail the first time. This is one of the most essential things in prison management.

"For this reason there should be more places such as the Alcatraz Prison. I have seen the results of segregation for many years, and I know that the young men who are not habitual criminals can be reformed, if it is in their character, and if kept from corrupting influences."

The warden, who has been a vice president of the American Trust Co. in California for a number of years, still likes to spend occasional free moments in banks.

"But of course, managing a prison is a 24-hour job," he smiled. "Vacations are no more in order for the warden than for the prisoners."

Plan to End Tax 'Leaks' Is Conference Problem

Chicago, Dec. 10 (AP).—Plans for stopping tax "leaks" which cost States and municipalities millions of dollars annually were discussed at the initial meeting of the Great Lakes Regional Tax Conference today, the outcome of which was expected to be the permanent organization of a "tax information clearing house."

Establishment of the permanent group will be acted upon tomorrow.

3d Youth Held, Tulsa Expects Mystery Clews

Boy Who Shot Out Lights at Kennamer Slaying Scene Arrested.

Tulsa, Okla., Dec. 10 (AP).—In their efforts to clear up a tangle of death, youthful intrigue and reputed extortion attempts, police tonight looked toward a malicious mischief trial in police court tomorrow to shed possible light on the fatal shooting of two prominent Tulsa youths, one listed as a suicide.

Homer Wilcox, jr., 17-year-old son of a prominent oil man, was arrested today and his trial set for tomorrow on allegations that he shot out street lights on Thanksgiving night at the spot where John Gorrell, 23, was slain a short time later.

Police Chief Charles Carr said it was hoped to develop what connection, if any, there was between that incident and the slaying of Gorrell, to which Phil Kennamer, 19, son of U. S. District Judge Franklin E. Kennamer, has confessed. Wilcox was released on $500 bail for appearance tomorrow.

Meanwhile, officers pushed their investigation of the apparent suicide yesterday of Sidney Born, jr., friend of Kennamer, Wilcox and Gorrell, who was found shot to death in his car near the spot and under much the same circumstances as was Gorrell Thanksgiving night.

Although officers said his death was suicide, Born's father refused to accept the theory.

Dr. L. C. Northrup, Born family physician, who at first declared it was "impossible" that the youth could have shot himself, later agreed with police, pointing out that examination had disclosed powder marks beneath the skin which indicated the pistol was held at very close range.

Police have learned that a few minutes before he was found fatally wounded, Born attempted to telephone young Kennamer from a suburb pay station. Kennamer is held on a murder charge in the matron's quarters of county jail. A jail attendant refused to permit the two to talk, it was said at the jail.

Born had told authorities he drove Kennamer to a hospital to meet Gorrell on Thanksgiving night. Kennamer and Gorrell then left on the fatal ride in Gorrell's car. Gorrell's body was found the next day bearing two bullet wounds.

Board Acts to Bar Coast Car Strike

Los Angeles, Dec. 10 (AP).—Officials of the Pacific Electric Co., which operates the interurban system around Los Angeles, conferred today with the National Mediation Board in the face of ultimatums by the Brotherhoods of Railway Trainmen and Signalmen that unless arbitration is agreed on a strike will be called Wednesday. Trainmen are seeking a pay increase of 30 cents an hour.

The board, sent from Washington to avert the strike which has been twice postponed, met yesterday with union leaders and Chairman William Leiserson said every effort would be made to bring the two sides together.

The threatened strike is independent of the two weeks' old strike of union workers of the Los Angeles Railway Co., which operates street cars and buses within the city.

Illinois Gangster Slain; Kidnap Plot Is Foiled

East St. Louis, Ill., Dec. 10 (AP). With the killing of James Hickey, Shelton gangster, officers today said they had crushed a plot to kidnap G. Locke Tarlton, wealthy contractor.

Hickey, an identified bank robber and suspected gang war marksman, was shot to death Saturday by officers who raided a fashionable residence near the Tarlton home and arrested a man and two women. The raid and gun fight were closely guarded police secrets until today when Joseph Schrader, a private detective, revealed the abduction plot.

Manchukuo 'Dictator' Is Sworn In by Japan

Tokyo, Dec. 10 (AP).—Gen. Jiro Minami became virtual ruler of Manchukuo today when he took the oath as Japanese Ambassador to that state and commander in chief of the empire's military forces there.

Japanese writers describe Gen. Minami as a firm believer in his country's destiny on the continent of Asia and in following a strong policy in dealing with China.

'Hold That Tiger,' Blares Band Of L. S. U. in Anticensor March

Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 10 (AP). The rhythm of "Tiger Rag," Louisiana State University's pep song, today turned the Reveille censorship row into a campus band parade and President James M. Smith admonished the students to forget about the Reveille and get down to work "for the good of L. S. U."

While the pep meeting was being held Senator Huey P. Long, who provoked the row by surpressing a criticism of him in the campus paper, Reveille, was prepared to go to Washington to lay before Congress his program "to save the Nation."

Long said his program would call for:

A graduated tax on capital wealth with $10,000,000 limitation of the wealth of a multimillionaire.

An old age pension.

Shorter work hours and possibly a work year of 11 months or a work year of 10 months to provide more employment and time for the working man to go back to school.

A cotton holiday to control overproduction and industrialization of the farmer in the off year.

An address of President Smith and the "Tiger Rag" campus jubilee by the L. S. U. Band which Huey Long often leads, served to smother the fire on the campus and to throw a damper over dual effigy hangings of Dr. Smith, to which the college head has made no reference.

Kidnaped Editor Escapes Shackles

Warns Police in Time to Stop $16,000 Payment.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 10 (AP).—Dr Santiago Claret, former Cuban newspaper editor, today freed himself of bonds placed on him by three abductors in time to stop payment on a $16,000 check they forced him to sign.

Claret's chauffeur, booked as Roy Gray, 26, was held "for investigation." He was arrested as he presented the check at a bank, along with a note from Claret asking bank officials to honor the check.

A squad of detectives had hurried to the bank after police received a telephone call from Claret, who said he had just managed to free himself after hours of struggling in an unfinished Miami Beach apartment where he had been taken by the abductors.

Counsel for Hauptmann To Confer With Justice

Flemington, N. J., Dec. 10 (AP). Bruno Richard Hauptmann's defense attorneys planned today to confer with Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard tomorrow to settle upon a date for argument pending motions in behalf of the Lindbergh kidnap-slaying suspect.

The most important matter pending is the defense demand for a bill of particulars of the prosecution's case. The German carpenter will go on trial here January 2 on an indictment charging him with the murder of the infant Charles A. Lindbergh, jr.

Slavs, Hungary Agree on Plan To Settle Clash

League Committee Named to Study Terrorism in Balkans.

cal terrorism and appease Yugoslavia. Both Yugoslavia and Hungary prior to the opening of today's council session had accepted tentatively the three-point resolution, but delayed final approval until the scheduled debate for this session had been held.

The peace move had no sooner been laid before the council than Nicholas Titulescu, Rumanian foreign minister, arose and delivered one of the most violent speeches ever heard at a league meeting. He frequently shouted to the galleries to stress his biting criticism of Hungary and support of Yugoslavia—a fellow member of the Little Entente which also includes Czechoslovakia.

Sees Threat of War.

Titulescu declared that Hungary's insistence on treaty revision constituted a threat of war.

"To each demand by Hungary for treaty revision," Titulescu shouted, "the three interested nations have replied with a categorical and final 'no!' To insist would not longer be a work of peace, but of war."

Titulescu personally attacked Eckhardt, Hungarian delegate, for an hour, and indirectly attacked Italy's revisionist theories as well as Hungary's. Hungary seeks to revise the treaties ending the war, to permit her to regain territory lost under those pacts.

"When one realizes how difficult it would be to localize a war if once it broke out," Titulescu cried, "am I right in asking if revisionism, in view of the trouble it creates, effectively services peace?"

The Rumanian statesman reaffirmed contentions voiced by Laval and Dr. Edouard Benes, Czechoslovakian foreign minister, that the Hungarian revisionist campaign violates Article X of the league covenant.

Attack on Hungary.

He definitely linked revisionism and terrorism, adding:

"For me, revisionism and terrorism are not entirely distinct. There is between them the parentage which unites father and child."

Titulescu, shaking his finger across the table at Eckhardt, called Eckhardt's speech Friday an "inexcusable provocation." He accused the Hungarian government of "the crime of omission in failing to control the Croat refugees."

Yugoslavia specifically charged Hungary permitted Croats to hide in Hungary while plotting the assassination of Alexander. Hungary denied the charges, declaring the plot was widespread, and even announced in a meeting in Youngstown, Ohio, last summer.

Yugoslavia's mass expulsions of hundreds of Hungarian residents in the last fortnight swung sympathy toward Hungary in some quarters, and Italy and France for a time were at loggerheads in support of Hungary and Yugoslavia, respectively.

Slav Foreign Minister May Be Forced Out

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—Resignation of Foreign Minister Jevitich was believed imminent tonight because of failure to obtain strong international condemnation of Hungary before the League of Nations.

The campaign for Jevitich's resignation was headed by Dr. Milan Srskitch, former premier; Dr. Voya Marinkovitch, former foreign minister and minister without portfolio in the present cabinet, and Boha Maximovitch, former secretary of justice.

Californian Sought As 'Baby Face's' Pal

John P. Chase, Small-Time Bootlegger, Hunted.

John Paul Chase, described by Federal officers as a small-time California bootlegger known to have been a pal of the late George "Baby Face" Nelson, was sought yesterday by Department of Justice agents, the Associated Press says.

Department officials would neither confirm nor deny a report that he had been identified as the man who was with Nelson and his wife in the gun battle at Barrington, Ill., in which "Baby Face" and two Federal men, Samuel P. Cowley and Herman E. Hollis, were slain.

It was made known that Federal investigators have concluded John Hamilton and Alvin Karpis, Western police characters, were not involved in this shooting. Earlier, their names had been mentioned in the case.

Map Shows Strategic Location of Proposed New Airport

Hains Point Site Urged for Airport

On the other hand, Hains Point is completely surrounded by roadway and it has been pointed out that the landing and taking off of planes might be a serious menace to traffic. One of the principal objections to the Washington-Hoover Airport is that a roadway bisects the landing area. Proposed improvements there contemplate removal of the road, but this plan has met with objections because the highway is a direct route from Virginia into Washington.

Another objection which has been made to the park site is its proximity to Bolling Field with the danger that military planes and commercial planes would interfere with each other. There also are a number of small trees around the Point. At least some of these would have to be removed. There are no wires and no other obstructions around the Point. The average altitude of the Point is 10 feet. This will necessitate an investigation into the necessity for more drainage and into the danger of fog.

Mitchell Sees Advantages.

In his memorandum Mitchell pointed out that there would be a distinct advantage in having an air terminal inside the District, rather than in Virginia. In the District the Government could prevent erection of any obstructing buildings or smokestacks around the port.

Financing of the proposed new terminal was not discussed. It has been suggested that the money could be supplied by the Public Works Administration or that it could be appropriated by Congress. The property is owned by the Federal Government. It is controlled by the Department of Public Buildings and Grounds, which in turn has leased the golf concession to a private concern. This contract still has one year to run.

Conversion of the site into an airport would deprive District golfers of most of their playing facilities close to the center of the city, unless additional holes are constructed at the lower end of the island. Elimination of the 36 holes at East Potomac Park would leave in the central part of the city only 9 holes, in West Potomac Park. There is a public course of 18 holes in Rock Creek Park, another of 18 holes at Fairlawn, operated by the Recreation Department, and another course exclusively for colored players.

Report in January.

The Potomac Park proposal is the newest of three to give Washington adequate air facilities. The others include the plan to improve the present port and the plan to build an airport on Gravelly Point in Virginia. The last plan was advocated last winter before the House Military Affairs Committee by the National Park and Planning Commission. One objection to the Gravelly Point site was that it was too near to Bolling Field.

The proposal for the park site was made to President Roosevelt by the Aviation Commission chairman just before the entire commission met with the President. The commission is completing its studies of the relationship of Government to aviation and its visit to the President was one of its concluding acts.

The commission members remained in the President's office about two hours.

"We gave the President our views and he gave us his," Howell said. "He had a lot to say, but I am not at liberty to repeat it."

Howell said the commission would report in January.

Keystone Vote Gives Byrns Lead

said indorsement of Byrns was not suggested by him.

Haines Reelected Leader.

The delegation reelected Haines group leader, and Representative William E. Richardson as secretary; then voted to hold group meetings and another conference just before the Democratic caucus.

Yesterday's move was viewed as a politically astute maneuver to pick the Speakership winner in advance of the caucus for whatever it might be worth in the way of seats on important committees and even some chairmanships. It is known Pennsylvania wants a place on the powerful Ways and Means Committee.

The announcement effectively sidetracked rumors that Pennsylvania would line up with New York and Texas in support of Representative Sam Rayburn. As for New York, two Speakership candidates from that State—Representative James M. Mead and Representative John J. O'Connor—now are said to be dickering with Byrns for a place on his ticket as floor leader. Byrns denied he has made any alliances.

Rough Weather Dims Hope of Saving Ulm

Honolulu, Dec. 10 (AP).—The Coast Guard cutter Itasca, still carrying on the apparently hopeless search for the plane, Star of Australia, radioed today no trace of wreckage or survivors had been found.

Stormy weather since Pilot Charles T. P. Ulm, Co-pilot George Littlejohn, and Navigator J. L. Skilling, were forced down at sea last Tuesday on their flight from Oakland, Calif., has removed all but the barest possibility of their plane remaining afloat.

Wyoming Senator Adds Voice Against Job Rider

Senator Robert D. Carey (Republican), Wyoming, yesterday voted for elimination of the McKellar "patronage rider" in The Post's poll of members of Congress.

Approximately 98 per cent of those voting have favored repeal of the rider, which is withholding the pay of 900 alcohol tax investigators of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Welles Views Good Will Aid In Trade Pacts

Will Cast Aside 'Narrow Bilateral Preferences,' He Tells Diplomats.

The trade agreements that the Roosevelt Administration is making with foreign nations will cast aside "narrow bilateral preferences," Assistant Secretary of State Sumner Welles said last night, to interlock in a general policy designed to smash all international commercial walls and restrictions.

"We seek to take the initiative in furthering the eventual application of the unconditional most-favored-nation policy which, in our judgment," he added, "is the only policy that will result in the removal of all of those countless artificial restrictions and barriers that have done so much to retard world progress and to bring about commercial enmities and rivalries which, in their turn, result in disturbance of world peace."

Before an audience at Corcoran Hall, George Washington University, that included the Ambassador of Brazil, the Ministers of Paraguay, Guatemala and Nicaragua, and other diplomatic attaches, Welles pictured a definite United States policy for Latin America. It meant the "good neighbor" politically and the fair trader economically, he said.

He hoped for peace in the Chaco War, disavowed any United States interference in Cuban politics, predicted a new political agreement "which will remove all well-founded ground for complaint which Panama has had," and concluded:

"Our continental policy is at last made of durable material. I hope it may forever be the keystone of the foreign policy of the United States."

It might be suggested that this outlet be controlled by a three-way switch from the master bedroom, so that the percolator could be started in the morning before going downstairs.

- Most wives have a dark suspicion that fraternal organizations and lodges are just excuses for their husbands to have a night off and thus escape having to wash the dishes. Perhaps there is something to this theory, but we've always argued that if the ladies can have their bridge and sewing clubs, we men have a perfect right to join the Ancient and Amalgamated Royal Society of Whumpty-do. Besides, the uniforms and badges are so impressive, and the conventions so entertaining. So most of us join a lodge or a brotherhood or an order, and, in desperation or curiosity, our wives join the ladies auxiliary.

And, after we have crossed the hot sands and ridden the billy-goat and passed the initiation into the Ancient and Honorable Order of Coffee-Dunkers, we like to find out how the other lodges and fraternal organizations in the city are getting along. Naturally, we turn to the fraternal pages of The Washington Post and there we learn just who was elected president of this-or-that fraternal group, and when the so-and-so club will hold its annual clam-bake, and where the next convention will be held. And, since we had a toothache and weren't present at the last lodge meeting, we can also find out what happened during our absence.

Miss Lora Kelly, editor of that section of The Washington Post which includes the fraternal pages, has a large staff of correspondents, each representing one of more fraternal groups, gathering news for these pages, and as a result The Post gives you a complete account of Washington's fraternal life. These news stories are clear, concise and complete, and if you are interested in any phase of fraternal organization activity, you can not afford to neglect The Post's club and fraternal pages each Sunday.

Photographs of club activities and members of executive boards also appear on these pages to add interest to the full coverage of fraternal events. Especially during this season, Washington's fraternal organizations are active, and to the person who is interested in this phase of city life, and in the tremendous work being accomplished by the many lodges and clubs in this city, The Washington Post's club pages are required reading.

For your convenience, you'll always find them in the same section of each Sunday's newspaper. We advise you to read the fraternal news each Sunday in

The Washington Post.

Jurisdiction Issue Argued in Eviction Case

Federal Bench Calls for Lawyers' Briefs in Via Dispute.

Harrisonburg, Va., Dec. 10. (Spl.). Whether the U. S. District Court has jurisdiction over the application of Robert H. Via, of Hershey, Pa., to restrain the Virginia Conservation and Development Commission from evicting him from his 154-acre Albemarle County farm, which has been condemned for the Shenandoah National Park, will be decided after attorneys for the two parties submit their briefs by the end of this week.

A three-judge court, headed by Judge John Parker, of Carlotte, N. C., of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, heard arguments until early tonight and then asked the attorneys to submit briefs. Sitting with Judge Parker were Judge William C. Coleman, of Baltimore, and Judge John Paul, of the home court.

Possible Delay Is Cited.

Both sides insisted that the court had jurisdiction. A. C. Carson, arguing for the Virginia Conservation and Development Commission, declared that if the court did not assume jurisdiction and the case had to go through the State courts to the United States Supreme Court at least 18 months would be required, delaying the development of the proposed Shenandoah National Park.

William J. Leahy, of Washington, representing Via, argued that the Federal court has jurisdiction as the action is not brought against the State of Virginia, but against the Conservation and Development Commission.

Interlocutory Writ Asked.

Leahy asked for an interlcutory injunction to prevent Via from being evicted from his property. He contended that the State of Virginia exceeded its powers of eminent domain in condemning the property for the park, and suggested the injunction be in effect pending decision on the constitutionality of the State act. He said Via simply wanted to establish the "status quo" of his property so he would not be deprived of its income pending a decision.

Various cases concerning the eminent domain powers of States were cited in the arguments. The fact that the Virginia Supreme Court has held the park condemnation act constitutional was emphasized by Judge Carson.

Careless Autoist Outdoes Weather As Accident Cause

Richmond, Va., Dec. 10 (AP).—Bad weather, dangerous roads and faulty mechanism cause accidents, but they still are no match for the careless driver, John Q. Rhodes, director of the division of motor vehicles, said today.

Telling of a survey being conducted by his division, Mr. Rhodes said results so far indicate that the greatest number of accidents in Virginia occur in broad daylight on straight roads. It also is indicated that accidents are on the increase, in spite of more stringent enforcement of safety laws by the division.

"The difficulty with the motor vehicle situation is that a mechanically perfect automobile and a good road lull the driver into a false sense of security," Mr. Rhodes said. "He drives along at a high rate of speed, feeling perfectly safe, when as a matter of fact the least little thing may send him to meet his Maker."

Flames Destroy Furniture Factory

Culpeper, Va., Dec. 10 (AP).—The W. J. Carpenter furniture factory, in Madison County, was destroyed by fire today, removing the means of livelihood of 35 to 40 families.

The plant, located between Brightwood and Madison Courthouse, was the only industry in the community in which it stood and employed local labor to manufacture chicken coops and oak furniture. The value of the building was estimated at around $10,000, but total loss from the fire had not been determined tonight.

Fire companies from Orange and Culpeper were called out to fight the blaze and late tonight still were at work trying to save some portion of the plant or its contents. Origin of the fire had not been determined.

John H. Bell, 51, Noted Doctor, Dies in Virginia

Was Superintendent for State Hospital, World War Veteran.

Staunton, Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—Dr. John Hendren Bell, 51, a leading Virginia psychiatrist and for 18 years superintendent of the State Epileptic Colony at Lynchburg, died here last night at his home. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Mossy Creek Presbyterian Church in Augusta County. A year ago Dr. Bell resigned his superintendency because of failing health, due to a heart affection.

Dr. Bell, son of the late Dr. Samuel H. and Sarah Ellen (Cosby) Bell, was born November 19, 1883, at Long Glade, Augusta County. His brother was the late Dr. Cosby Bell, beloved member of the faculty of the Virginia Theological Seminary.

Had Wide Experience.

Survivors incude his wife, formerly Miss Elizabeth S. Harlowe, of Jordan Mines, Va., and a daughter, Mrs. William Lambert, jr., both of Staunton, and a sister, Mrs. Frederick Harman, Bridgewater, Va.

Dr. Bell was educated in private schools, Washington and Lee University, the University of Virginia Medical School, the Medical College of Virginia, and the Medical School of the University of the South.

He had a wide experience in his chosen profession. Move to Disarm Brother-in-Law Ends in Slaying

William Hancock, 36, Is Killed Near Salisbury; Sister Is Wounded.

Salisbury, Md., Dec. 10. (Spl.).—In an attempt to disarm his brother-in-law, William Hancock, 36, was shot through the heart and instantly killed at the Red Raven filling station operated by him on the Hebron road, west of here, late last night.

Robert Morgan, 33, the brother-in-law, is held in the Wicomico County Jail, charged with murder.

It is alleged that Morgan, who lives in Crisfield, entered the filling station nuder the influence of liquor and drawing a gun commenced to fire promiscuously. One of the bullets hit Ruby Hancock, Morgan's sister, inflicting a leg wound.

Hancock attempted to take the gun from his brother-in-law when, without any warning, it is alleged, Morgan fired point-blank at him, the bullet entering his left chest. Witnesses told the sheriff that Hancock staggered back from Morgan and said, "God, he's got me!" He crumpled to the floor and was dead before medical aid could be summoned.

Morgan was found by Sheriff Charles Truitt back of the filling station and the sheriff said he readily admitted the shooting, saying, "I'm the man. I shot him."

Ruby Hancock was taken to Peninsula General Hospital, where physicians said her wound was superficial.

Revival of Gold Panning Seen In Orange Section of Virginia

Orange, Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—Gold is being panned today in Virginia even as it was in the West in the days of '48.

Fred Smith, engineer in the nearby gold mine, spends his spare moments panning gold, using the same method as was used during the Western gold rush. He has a bottle of the ore which he has taken from surface washing.

Near the Vaucluse gold mine in Orange County panning has proved profitable although the process is long and tiresome for the few dollars' worth of ore found.

Surface Washing.

While the gold region of Virginia has not been rushed by gold seekers, the community around the mine has been panned by some out of curiosity to see if it was possible to procure gold through surface washing in that part of the country.

From time to time people have tried nearby districts for surface gold, but the best place seems to be near the Vaucluse mine. The mine itself was discovered about 1832 and was worked for a number of years as a deposit or surface mine. After the veins were found this type of mining was abandoned.

Contemporary with the Vauclose mine was the Woodville mine, discovered, so the story goes, about 1847 by a group of children returning from Sunday school, who found a piece of gold on the property which was later the site of the mine.

At the time of the discovery there was a rush to the scene and a small colony of workers washed the earth in a crudely fashioned rocker. It is said that at the peak of the work between $5 and $6 worth of gold was taken by panning in a single day.

Transients Busy.

Attention was drawn away from the Virginia mines by the more important discoveries in the West and by the Civil War, which ended mining activities for a time. Not until recently had any of the mines been worked with any regularity and modern equipment.

Even as people in the West have been impelled to seek for gold by panning, the Virginia gold region has seen a revival of it.

Transient gold seekers, traveling in old model cars instead of the covered wagon of the West, have stopped to set up their rockers and to pitch tents wherever there is a hope of finding gold.

Virginia Relief Held Cleared In Federal Plan

State Four Years Ahead of Nation on Work Aid, Says Peery.

Richmond, Dec. 10 (Spl.).—Gov. Peery today was scrutinizing Federal work relief plans indicating that Washington is turning toward a new relief policy that may resemble, in many respects, the plan which the Commonwealth has followed since 1931, and for which the Federal Relief Administration has criticized Virginia on a number of occasions.

"If the Federal Government adopts a general policy of work relief in place of direct payments, Virginia can claim to be four years ahead of the country," the Governor remarked.

He said that adoption of a work relief plan by Washington should take care of criticisms of the Virginia plan and solve the question so often raised by the FERA as to why the Virginia State government offered work instead of direct payments to indigents, and "did not do its share" in the way of direct relief appropriations.

Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator, has threatened to cut Virginia relief allotments in February unless Virginia puts up matching funds for direct relief, and the Governor now hopes that the new Washington policy will lift this threat.

Since 1931 the State has used more than $6,000,000 in highway funds to give employment to needy unemployed, but the State government has made no appropriation or direct hand-outs of money.

Gov. Pollard inaugurated the plan and Gov. Peery has been stanchly defending it.

Virginians Second In Poultry Judging

Team Finishes 3 Points Behind Oklahomans.

Winchester, Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.). The Virginia poultry judging team won second place at the international live stock show held in connection with the National 4-H Club Congress in Chicago last week, according to information received here today.

Oklahoma with 2,951 points was first and the Virginia team next with 2,948 points and Indiana third, with 2,881.

Richard Fadeley, of Shenandoah County, and Miss Ruth Wampler, of Dayton, were outstanding in judging exhibition birds. Fadeley also ranked high in judging under market poultry. Ernest Cerney, of the Virginia team, was awarded a silver plaque for being high individual in judging exhibition birds, and three members of the team received silver medals.

The bond was previously $250,000, but was reduced by consent of the circuit court, due to the decrease of business by the receiver and in order to effect an economy on the payment of premiums.

ProbeResumed In 'Moonshine' Tax Conspiracy

100 Witnesses to Be Heard in Investigation at Harrisonburg.

Harrisonburg, Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.). Inquiry into the alleged Franklin County conspiracy to violate national revenue laws was resumed by the grand jury in United States District Court here today. A dozen witnesses were heard.

Reports were that at least 100 witnesses will be heard here during the next two weeks of the investigation. Many of these were summoned by Federal agents during the grand jury recess last week. Twenty-five witnesses, it was said, will be available here for testimony tomorrow.

One hundred witnesses were heard during the first 12 days the grand jury was in session. It is said that many of these were either engaged in the moonshine traffic in Franklin and adjacent counties or knew of operations of the alleged "ring." Some of these witnesses are known to have told officers they paid for "protection" to operate stills and haul away the contraband to Roanoke and neighboring cities.

Agents today would give no indication as to when the probe will be concluded. They hinted they might have all their evidence in before Christmas. It was learned that considerable portion of the main evidence has been introduced and that the remainder is largely corroborative. Agents say they have no difficulty in obtaining witnesses, as Franklin residents now are eager to tell what they know.

League to Make Survey Of Nonemergency Relief

Relief requirements of children and families whose needs are not directly caused by unemployment throughout the winter will be considered by the board of directors of the Montgomery County Social Service League tonight in the juvenile courtroom of the courthouse in Rockville, Md. Walter B. Armstrong, chairman of a special committee recently appointed to investigate the emergency situation in the county, will make a report on the findings of his group.

According to Dr. Jacob W. Bird, president of the league, his organization is called upon to deal with all types of child and family relief and social welfare problems not caused by unemployment.

The Perkins Case.

A Federal court has found Fred C. Perkins, a small-scale manufacturer of batteries, guilty of violating the wage provisions of the code covering his industry. Various witnesses testified that they had received wages varying from 16 cents to 25 cents per hour instead of the 40-cent minimum prescribed by the code, and the defense did not deny the charges. The decision will therefore be approved by all those who regard the NRA as an agency for raising wage standards and preventing exploitation of workers.

If a small manufacturer were permitted to undercut the code scale with impunity on the ground that he could not afford to pay more, wage agreements would soon cease to have any binding force. As a matter of fact, small employers with limited capital resources and relatively high production costs are more likely to resort to wage undercutting than large concerns under less pressure to reduce costs. Consequently when a clear-cut issue is presented for decision, a plea of necessity does not seem to be an adequate defense against conviction.

The Perkins case has another important angle which makes it highly desirable that an appeal should be carried to the higher courts. It raises squarely the issue of the constitutionality of a law which dictates to a private manufacturer, in the position of Mr. Perkins, what wages he shall pay. The defendant maintains that he is doing an intrastate business and hence is not subject to the provisions of a Federal law which applies to interstate commerce. The Government, on the other hand, contends that the offending manufacturer is engaged in interstate commerce, because his products are sold in other States. The courts must decide whether to accept this most liberal definition of interstate commerce or to reject it on the ground that precedents do not sustain such a loose interpretation. A final decision is much needed as a guide for the framing of permanent legislation to take the place of the present recovery act.

Deflating The Moderns.

Deflation—and Thomas Craven—has hit the art market. During the early part of the last decade astounding prices were brought by the French moderns. Mr. Craven said not long ago, and in angry terms, that the reason for the long inflation was less art than salesmanship.

This season shows the results of his iconoclasm. The late Chester H. Johnson owned a number of moderns. Among critics it was known as a comprehensive collection. Few were masterpieces, but they were of good average standard. But when they were sold last week at auction in New York some of them were knocked down for less than $100 each!

And some were not even bid upon!

Originally a Matisse window-and-figure had cost the collector $4,000. It sold for $375. A flower piece by Redon, however, brought $1,500, which was the top price, except for a Florentine primitive, which was sold for $1,000 more! While the Matisses and Picassos were bringing prices which would wring tears from the eyes of a French dealer, a Joshua Reynolds portrait fetched $1,400.

It would seem from this that the craze for the ism-arts of yesterday has gone. Deflation is right. If nothing else, this will hearten the American artist, who is all agog these days over the discovery that the barnyard or the stockyard, the railroad track or the breadline, contains the living germ of art. Windows and figure, fishes, and abstractions—fooey. Realism—and Sir Joshua—is to the fore!

A Potential Racket.

Warning against a new type of speculation which may cost gullible investors large sums has been issued by the Federal Alcohol Control Administration. Director Choate has discovered that "high-pressure" methods are being used to sell bonded whiskey warehouse receipts throughout the country. Elaborate organizations of brokers and dealers have been set up, he says, and already thousands of barrels of whisky have been sold to the public through warehouse receipts "at wholly exorbitant prices."

Before prohibition, warehouse receipts were used to transfer whiskey ageing in warehouses supervised by the Government to legitimate rectifiers and wholesalers. The only motive an individual not in the liquor business could have in purchasing such receipts is to hold them for a profit. But Mr. Choate points out that the only substantial market for such receipts are the rectifiers and wholesalers. Certainly they can not be expected to buy up these receipts from the public at the prices now charged for them.

Whiskey represented by these receipts can be withdrawn from bonded warehouses in barrels only by licensed rectifiers, distillers and State dispensaries. To actually obtain possession of such whiskey other receipt holders would have to pay for having it bottled besides settling all Federal, State and local taxes and paying storage charges. Moreover, much of the liquor being thus sold is "light-bodied" and will not greatly improve in quality with age. Because of the enormous amount of whiskey now in the ageing process the administration opines that by 1938 the price of four-year-old whiskey will not greatly exceed the current price of the new product.

"It is thus evident," says the FACA, "that unless the greatest care is exercised, purchasers of warehouse receipts, far from making a profit, are practically certain to sustain substantial losses." Such a timely warning against a potential racket deserves commendation, but it is by no means certain that it will be sufficient to protect gullible speculators.

Not Merely Lip Service.

Evidently the business leaders of the country are determined to prove that they do not deserve all the harsh epithets that have been hurled at their heads. Berated for lack of enterprise and accused of being obstructionists, they are now coming forward with proposals of a positive and constructive nature which none can call reactionary.

The American Congress of Industry was warned last week by the head of the NRA regarding the "wailing of timid men that they dare not rehabilitate their plants, that they dare not expand their business, or reemploy idle workers, until the safety of their operations is assured by the Government." This, said Mr. Richberg, "furnishes only an incitement and justification of further extensions of the protecting and controlling powers of the state." The industrialists responded by approving a recovery platform that pledged support for a program of social insurance and offered valuable suggestions for the future of the NRA.

Obviously, there is a profound difference between promises of support and effective cooperation. Nevertheless, the changed attitude is evidence that business leaders have become imbued with a new feeling of personal responsibility for assisting national recovery. Proceeding from resolutions, the next step is to frame a working program that will bring results. That is the purpose of the conference of business leaders which is to meet shortly at White Sulphur Springs, as representatives of the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

A large number of so-called recovery programs have already been launched by various groups of business men, but as a rule they have been negatively rather than affirmatively critical, thereby appearing to justify charges of noncooperation. However, it seems certain that the coming conference will bring together men who are genuinely anxious to reach an agreement that will serve as a guide to practice, and assist the fulfillment of pledges of cooperation.

Of course it would be naive to assume that any group of business men, however representative, can infuse the cooperative spirit into all of the thousands of competing units that make up our economy. As Mr. Richberg said in his address to the Industrial Congress, the capacity for industrial self-government, without which cooperative furtherance of a definite program of action is extremely difficult, is "pretty weak."

It can be strengthened, however, if vigorous and liberal direction is given to general policies by industrial leaders in whom lesser business men have confidence. That is the surest way to dissipate the mistaken belief that government and business are working at cross-purposes.

Protecting The Lira.

The drastic steps taken by Italy to stop the heavy drain upon her gold reserves and maintain the present parity of the lira emphasizes once more the need for international stabilization agreements that would put a stop to mass movements of gold from country to country. Losses of the yellow metal give rise to anxiety as to the fate of a country's currency when they result, as in this case, from an unfavorable balance of international payments, threatening further depletion of resources.

Recurrent deficits on international account can not be settled over an indefinitely long period of time by shipping huge amounts of gold to creditor nations. Italy has already lost well over 1,000,000,000 lire during the past year. The outflow has been due principally to a heavy increase in the unfavorable merchandise balance, with exports declining sharply and imports rising slightly.

The latest restrictions upon exchange dealings are designed to place all foreign credits belonging to Italian citizens at the disposal of the Government, to be converted into lire at current rates of exchange if desired. By such means and through further restrictions upon imports it is hoped to cover the deficit in international payments and stop the drain on the gold reserve.

Obviously, measures of this sort even if temporarily effective, can not provide a final solution of Italy's transfer problem, which accounts for the weakness of the lira. The increasing maze of exchange restrictions imposed by countries which, like Italy, lack adequate resources with which to cover external obligations, make a bad situation worse. As a result trade continues to shrink and the return to more normal conditions becomes increasingly difficult.

The remedy for existing currency disorders does not lie in more, but in fewer, exchange restrictions. However, the abolition of such restrictions calls for international cooperation to fix and then maintain stable currency values at rates that are adapted to the requirements of the countries concerned. Incidentally Italy's exchange difficulties throw an instructive sidelight upon the limitations of planning. Even so able a dictator as Premier Mussolini, can not insure effective control over external relations, despite the fact that circumstances are exceptionally favorable to the successful carrying out of his domestic policies.

Cost Of Expansion.

The first president of the University of Chicago, William Rainey Harper, once stated that no further gifts of buildings would be welcomed unless the donor also provided funds for covering their current upkeep. That warning was voiced at the opening of the century before our institutions of learning had entered upon a mad competitive race to secure endowments for erecting bigger and more expensive buildings. Today many of our colleges and universities are learning that wealth embodied in brick and stone may impoverish the owner and defeat the purposes of education instead of furthering them.

The financial problems of Johns Hopkins, as reported by President Joseph S. Ames, provide a typical illustration of the penalties attaching to over-rapid growth. When the university moved from modest quarters, a number of years ago, overhead charges were greatly increased and it became necessary to seek financial assistance from the State. With new buildings, attracting a larger undergraduate student body, with a new school of engineering and other novel adjuncts, the university could grow, but not in a way calculated to enhance the reputation made in the drab old buildings where research work had been carried on so effectively.

Rapid growth, moreover, in the case of Johns Hopkins, entailed a sacrifice of the cherished independence which institutions relying solely upon private endowments often enjoy. Yet funds contributed by the State constituted less than 3 per cent of the income of the university in the academic year 1933-34. Certainly this is a small gain to offset the loss of reputation which once made Baltimore world-famous as the seat of the Hopkins.

So long as the country was prosperous and men of means were generous donors, deficits due to short-sighted expansionist policies could be covered with relative ease, and often without impairment of educational standards. But at last the day of reckoning has come for many universities.

With the president of Johns Hopkins they ask how they can sufficiently reduce expenditures and still have institutions worthy of the names and reputations they have acquired. In some cases there will be no satisfactory solution; a forced and steady deterioration of the quality of instruction will be unavoidable. No permanent benefits will accrue to those institutions which succeed in attracting needed gifts and endowments unless they resolve to employ them wisely.

Little-Doctor, What Now?

New Yorkers were somewhat astonished yesterday to find that to one person at least their breath-taking skyline and their almost unbelievable network of subways was an anticlimax. In the words of this calm little sightseer, the former was "just about what I thought it would be" and the latter was simply "very convenient."

Motorcycle sirens, cordons of police, an official welcoming committee and a crowd of interested spectators greeted Dr. Allan Roy DaFoe when he stepped off the train in Grand Central Terminal to be whisked to the Ritz Carlton Hotel in a huge black limousine. This tiny doctor from Canada, who astounded the medical world with his obstetrical skill in delivering the Dionne quintuplets, has arrived in the States as the guest of a great chain of drug stores. He faced 50 eager Gotham reporters with the same urbanity with which he faced the problem of caring for the famous babies which he ushered into the world last May. It was soon apparent to his hosts that the little man's high-booted feet were very firmly on the ground.

The little doctor said he wished particularly to see the Statue of Liberty, the zoo and a night club. The reception committee is taking a special delight in turning his every wish into a command. It is only fitting that we should thus recognize a job well done. Such acclaim is all the more to the point when the man in question, though physically small, is mentally and spiritually big enough to realize that in comparison with the miracle of life, the machine-made artificiality of the world's largest city is nothing more than just "a convenience."

Deciding on a course of action usually isn't so much the exercise of judgment as it is merely a matter of choosing between what you want to do and what you ought to do.

A debt moratorium is a splendid thing for individuals who will never again need credit.

It's a pity that a country can't have free speech without having so many free speakers.

You'll notice that when it does rain, it's the pessimist who has an umbrella.

Thanks.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is almost impossible to praise too highly the generosity of The Washington Post and Mr. Eugene Meyer, its publisher, in presenting the National Symphony Orchestra to the school children of this city at a price which requires little financial outlay on the part of the children's parents. These concerts by this organization, with explanations of the music and musical instruments by Dr. Hans Kindler, would be of inestimable value if they did no more than awaken in the children a desire to hear something in the musical world besides jazz, blue singers and crooners.

Not satisfied with that kindly deed, Mr. Meyer and The Washington Post arranged for the broadcasting of the orchestra's concert from the Eastern High School on December 7. The amount of pleasure given "shut-ins" by this opportunity to hear our own orchestra can not be calculated.

We thank Mr. Meyer and The Washington Post.

GUY A. OURAND.

Washington, Dec. 7.

We Did Not So Recommend.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please allow me to dissent from your recent editorial recommendation to the effect that the munitions inquiry should be granted no further funds, thus bringing to a close the hearings.

The more publicity the sordid tale gets the better. As wide as possible a dissemination of the facts in the situation is highly desirable. Open hearings, no more sensational than the damaging data in possession of the committee permits, serve this purpose and should be continued until the nature of the problem is impressed upon the minds of as many persons as can read.

I believe one of the good results of these hearings, and of the publicity naturally flowing therefrom, is psychological. A healthy cynicism is being created in the minds of many on the whole question of war, an attitude essential in the attempt to curb the war spirit. And the more publicity given the almost daily revelations concerning the activity of especially foreign munition concerns, the larger the possibility becomes of increasing vastly the number of those who hereafter, let us hope, will view the question of war and the preparation therefor in a more critical manner.

For this reason (among others) the writer thinks the hearings should be enabled to continue as at present. In this fashion, a daily barrage of facts of news value will be laid down, facts disillusioning to the hitherto chauvinistic newspaper reader. The information secured by the committee and the legislation to follow from it is one thing; but the presentation of this information under circumstances assuring a wide reading public is equally important. The latter valuable aspect of the inquiry would be largely defeated if the remaining data in the possession of the committee were simply printed in a governmental document.

J. J. BURNS.

Headachy Futures.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To attribute the existent chaos in our country to former President Hoover, the Republican Party and Wall Street seems almost too absurd to merit sane discussion. As a Democrat, I am not, however, unmindful of political corruption, or of the mania to "get rich quick," which motivated men during the Coolidge "bull market."

Our troubles began when we indulged in a wild spending spree in 1917, in the futile attempt to "make the world safe for democracy." The world was actually made unsafe for everything and everybody. The old globe was compelled to begin building anew on the ashes of that conflagration.

Prior to the World War, we functioned under Republican rule with a reasonable degree of security and contentment. The national debt was only a billion and a half; people were temperate; brain-trusters had not entered the picture with a lot of unworkable schemes, nor were our lawmakers determined to legislate an Utopian state through prodigious spending.

The present orgy of waste can not last forever. Then what? A lot of us are of the opinion that Uncle Sam will be nursing the worst headache in history when the spree is over.

Building for Peace.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have finished a hard day's work, a day of constructive work. I pick up the paper. A glance at the headlines reveals, "U. S. Rejects Naval Parity of Japan;" "Hungarians in Trouble." What do all these rumblings mean? Is it that the world has not enough to do without asking for war and what other troubles may arise?

May I voice, to the leaders of our country, the spirit of St. Louis concerning war? We have built and are building solid homes for the future. This represents our aim and joy in life. This is a constructive attitude. We believe the rest of the United States is acting likewise, in building for the future. We believe we can not in the same spirit and with the same hand serve the forces of conflict, destruction, and war.

Therefore, take this as a solemn plea from a number of St. Louisans to follow the constructive path of building peace among nations.

A SPIRIT FROM ST. LOUIS.

Why They Lynch.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There has been considerable controversy in the papers recently on the subject of lynching—its cause and effect. It seems to the writer that one of the chief causes for lynching has been overlooked. It is the fact that so many criminals, because of some legal technicality, are allowed to go free; and even if convicted, appeal from one court to another until they get to the Supreme Court, which procedure generally takes two or three years and costs the State or county thousands of dollars.

There is a case pending before the Supreme Court at present which seems to illustrate my point. These men were convicted in a State court for criminal assault, they appealed the case to all the State courts and their conviction was upheld. The case was finally appealed to the Supreme Court. That was two or three years ago. This is one of the reasons why we have so many lynchings. People get disgusted with the slow process of the law—the miscarriage of justice—and take the law into their own hands.

There was a bill introduced in Congress at the last session known as the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill, but it met an ignominious defeat. It is the writer's opinion that Congress can't stop lynching by passing an antilynching bill. Mad men have no ears, and the ruling passion conquers reason.

Congress passed the eighteenth amendment but that did not stop people from drinking liquor. So it will do no good to pass antilynching laws until the real cause has been removed—"make the punishment fit the crime."

Desperate Remedies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The New York Times of December 5 carried an Associated Press article about the starling nuisance. May I venture to suggest that you have authorities tie on one tree a good dose of red pepper fumes? That will do the work, I am sure.

Start a nice fire in an iron container and feed the fire with red pepper and watch the dear starlings go away. I have pulled the trick in my own yard.

Stalin to Wells

In its current issue The Modern Monthly prints the first complete text published here of the interview between H. G. Wells and Stalin. This text proves that Mr. Shaw was unjust in condemning his old Fabian colleague as a bad listener, for Stalin did considerably more than 50 per cent of the talking. True, the whole thing reads more like a debate than what is ordinarily called an interview, but then we must not forget that etymologically "interview" implies a genuine exchange of opinion, and Stalin got opinions in exchange. It must have been rather novel to hear some one tell him to his face that capable persons in the West "regard your simple class-war antagonism as nonsense," that "the insurrectionary note is obsolete," and that the "Communist propaganda in the West is a nuisance to constructive-minded people," but he seems to have taken it all good-naturedly enough.

Indeed, the interview shows him to be an adroit debater, well versed in English history, even if his arguments all have a very familiar ring. With every attempt of Wells to pry him loose from the class-war concept he only returns with increased persistence. This reaches its most naive point when Wells suggests that there are many men of good-will at all economic levels, and that what we are trying to benefit is not a class but humanity. Stalin replies: "You, Mr. Wells, evidently start out with the assumption that all men are good. I, however, do not forget that there are many wicked men. I do not believe in the goodness of the bourgeoisie." It is a fight between the good and the wicked, and which you are depends upon your income.

None the less, our New Dealers, at least, will be thankful for one remark of Stalin's. Wells praises the ideas of the New Deal, adding that "in my opinion they are Socialist ideas." This is an embarrassing sort of endorsement just at present, but the New Dealers can point to the Communist dictator's retort that the New Deal is merely an attempt to make a few "concessions" to save a wobbling capitalism.

When Wells rises to go, he says that he intends to discuss with Soviet writers the possibility of their affiliating with the P. E. N. Club. The organization, he explains, insists upon "free expression of opinion—even of opposition opinion." Stalin replies, unabashed: "We Bolsheviks call it 'self-criticism.' It is widely used in USSR." Those who read the accounts of the savage wholesale executions of December 5 are entitled to their own inferences of just how free and full and outspoken opposition opinion must now be in such an atmosphere.

The Post Impressionist

Raids on the Air.

Post Office, Tuesday.

SCOLDING the radio is not yet a thoroughly established indoor sport. But it is well on its way to popularity. At its present rate of speed and spread, it should soon achieve permanence.

Are they properly planned to meet his taste?

And, if they are, ought they to be?

Ought they to elevate him—or merely titillate him?

An ever increasing number of people are asking these questions. And most of their answers, even when they disagree with one another, wind up by berating the programs, just the same.

Here, for example, is A. M. Sullivan, writing in The Commonweal, who complains:

"For a long time, the radio-station directors have been fearful of high-brow programs . . . Conjuring in their brain the typical radio-listener, they desired to strike an average of taste . . .

"Radio, except for the fine music and the occasional program of some esthetic pioneer, is the sport of the Philistines, who see it as the vaudeville booking-agent sees the stage. His method has been to give as much cheap variety as possible."

The Post-Impressionist is not entering a categorical denial to all such charges. He holds no brief for the program-makers—for some of their "artists" he wouldn't hold a brief at any fee. Nevertheless, he does feel that there is an element of injustice in the wide sweep of such rancor. He does feel that the programs are not too low-brow for the typical radio-listener—or too high-brow, either.

He simply doesn't believe that the typical radio-listener exists.

Even Mr. Sullivan admits:

"The typical radio-listener . . . is as difficult to find as the typical Babbitt."

There was a time when the radio was a toy—a scientific toy, but decidedly a toy. As such, it naturally became the plaything of that singularly childish sort of adult who is irresistibly attracted by scientific toys. It was marvelous—whether it carried the gobble of a Virginia turkey to Washington, or wafted the wisdom of a Presidential inaugural address from the steps of the Capitol to Takoma Park. Yet—because it was a toy and because its chief users were mentally children—the gobble was preferred.

However, the radio soon grew to what it is today. It was available to people of all sorts. It could entertain all sorts, be useful to all sorts. What it could do, it did. Therefore, all sorts of people began listening to it—and, therefore, they have kept on listening.

So how can there be a typical radio-listener?

Says Mr. Sullivan:

"This much is certain. The man and woman in the armchair at home are in a different mood from the person who pays $3 for a theater ticket. Their minds are relaxed and receptive to a more intimate style of social contact. The radio artist . . . is a guest in a private home and is expected to conduct himself accordingly."

It seems to us that all critics pay too little attention to the greatest boon of the radio. The greatest boon of the radio is not what it does, but what it can be stopped from doing.

The listener can always shift the dial. If none of the programs pleases him, he can even turn off the current. What's more, he can do these things without hurting the feelings of anybody at the studio. He can take the sting of conscience out of the benefits of rudeness.

Even the master of ceremonies beside the microphone can go far that way. He does not have to be so tactless as the man who gagged Floyd Gibbons.

We know an instance.

A publicity-promoter of our acquaintance arranged an air-line peace-demonstration. One of the invited speakers, an educator of importance, didn't show his notes to the promoter until just before the program started—and then they turned out to be anything except pacific. The promoter wanted no face-to-face trouble. He said:

"Doctor you were to be the first speaker, but I believe you ought to close the program. You don't mind?"

The professor didn't mind a bit. Until he asked distant friends how they liked his speech, he didn't know that he had spoken into a dead microphone . . .

Still, we don't believe that the radio corporations ought to take too much umbrage at the scoldings of the multitude—or even at the scoldings of the Post-Impressionist. We believe that those scoldings are a good sign—for the radio corporations.

We Americans are a fickle people, and the more we love, the more exacting we are. We don't like anything long—unless we can object to it. We want to scold baseball teams. We want to scold motion-picture actresses. Some of us even want to scold the President. When the American public begins to scold anything, that thing has a warm place in the American public's heart.

Bolivian Developments Complicate Situation

Indians Held Vital Factor, But Censorship Veils Extent of Responsibility for Events.

By Paul Vanorden Shaw

THOSE who can visualize the Bolivian scene and who know Bolivia's history will be tempted to guess that there is much more than meets the eye in the latest highly censored news which reaches the outside from La Paz, the world's highest capital. In the absence of more specific information about the recent coup d'etat, or what-not, which resulted in the resignation of President Daniel Salamanca and the accession of Jose Luis Tejada Sorzano, all analyses of the possible trends in Bolivia itself and of the effect of these on the prosecution or termination of the Gran Chaco war must remain in the nature of conjectures, even though based on well-known background factors.

The internal developments in Bolivia just now are important because of their bearing on two major events of the last few weeks. One of these was the stinging and smashing victory of the Hispano-Guarani troops of Paraguay over the Bolivian Indian soldiers, at Fort Ballivain on November 17. This fort was the keystone of Bolivian defenses in the Chaco and its loss was a severe blow to Bolivian pride and prestige, a blow to those who hoped that peace might be arranged before a military victory was achieved by either side, and to the Bolivian administration, which had set its heart on carrying on the war to the bitter end.

The other development is the latest peace plan proposed by the League of Nations, announced at about the same time that Paraguay was registering her impressive victory. In desperation the league had been traveling backward in the covenant to find articles applicable to the situation. It finally lighted on Article XV, which refers to conciliation before the outbreak of hostilities and after determining the constitutionality of resorting to this article, proposed a plan, which is even now being considered.

In a nutshell the plan provides for the cessation of hostilities and for the creation of a neutral zone in the Chaco to be policed by an international military commission. Shortly after this is achieved a conference is to meet in Buenos Aires to arbitrate the boundary dispute, economic problems and questions of security. The arbitrators invited are several American nations, members of the league, with the United States and Brazil. Acceptance of membership by the United States on this neutral supervisory commission was announced last week by the Department of State. Should this conference fail to adjudicate the differences between Paraguay and Bolivia the league will again take the matter over and perhaps present it to the permanent court.

If, however, Paraguay should continue its victorious march, and should the reports be confirmed that Bolivia's army is demoralized and in disorderly rout, this peace plan will probably become somewhat academic. On the other hand, should Bolivia carry on, as her new president, Senor Tejada, has announced, and should she be able to reorganize her forces, the probabilities are that the league will insist on having its plan considered by the two nations at war.

* * * *

THE report of the league commission, which went to the Chaco a year ago this November, realistically and fearlessly revealed all of the interests at stake in the Chaco. The report named names and uncovered all the links which make the Chaco problem far more than a squabble between two small South American nations. Munition interests, oil interests, quebracho interests and many other interests which lead through La Paz and Asuncion to Santiago, Buenos Aires, New York and London were mentioned. And yet the league has suggested that many of the nations that have direct and indirect interests in the Chaco should act as arbitrators in a dispute in which they and their citizens are involved. Bolivia has more than once stated that it does not consider Buenos Aires neutral ground or the Argentine Republic a disinterested party!

If the failure of all American attempts to stop this war were not enough to suggest that this question can only be settled by the league, or by some such neutral body far removed from the conflict, the involved interests which the league itself has brought to light should have suggested that shifting the burden of responsibility back on American nations might prove futile. Geneva's reference to the Monroe Doctrine savors of buck-passing because the American State Department itself has not raised this issue and has repeatedly asserted its willingness to have the league solve this South American riddle.

But if the overthrow of President Salamanca means thorough-going social overturn in Bolivia, a different face is put on the whole matter. Eighty-five per cent of the population of Bolivia is either Indian or Mestizo. They form the bulk of the armies which have been swallowed up by the Chaco or which have been mowed down by Paraguayan guns. And though their commanding officers are "white," they belong to a people which has gradually been awakened in the last decades to their lost rights, to the exploitation which they have suffered and to their own glorious traditions.

* * * *

ARCHEOLOGY and industrialism, a curious combination, have made the Bolivian Indians both more Indian-culture conscious and more aware of their poverty and humble lot. They have helped to dig up the evidences that their ancestors were a highly artistic peoples and that Tiahuanaco may possibly be the oldest city in the world. It is they, too, who drive the machines, who repair the airplanes and operate the machine guns which the "whites" own and use for their own good. Though Bolivia has neglected shamefully, and purposely, according to some commentators, the education of the Indians, their very service in the armies has been a school in practical politics for one thing and in European culture for another. They are no longer the passive Indians of yesterday. In 1927 more than 40,000 rose in rebellion against their "white" masters!

To what extent the Indians of Bolivia are responsible for the recent trend of events in that republic is a question which can only be answered when the censorship is lifted and qualified observers are allowed to make their reports. But this is certain: The Indian is a vital factor in the situation.

If the reports are correct that President Tejada has the support of Gen. Blanco Galindo, chief of staff, and provisional president of Bolivia after the revolution of 1930, the present administration has the backing of a patriotic, able and self-sacrificing Bolivian soldier and scholar. Gen. Blanco Galindo once openly accused Gen. Kundt, the German instructor of the Bolivian army, of having forced Bolivia into the war with Paraguay and suggested that the difficulties with Paraguay might have been settled honorably and peacefully.

And if it is true that President Tejada called to his cabinet former President Bautista Saavedra, who is now in Chile, it is perhaps because the Indians of whom we have spoken are an important factor in the situation. For Saavedra is accredited with being the most influential leader of the Indians and Mestizos of Bolivia.

Though these reports do not accord with the recent announcement of President Tejada that Bolivia will fight to the finish they do suggest something of the nature of the internal commotion in Bolivia, and of the personalities which appear to be forging to the front as the result of the resignation of the scholarly Dr. Salamanca.

Cheaper Milk Move Opposed

Mrs. Harvey Wiley Hits Consumers' Council on Its Demand.

Baltimore, Dec. 10 (Spl.).—The Consumers' Council of Washington was taken to task here today by Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, a member, for its demand for cheaper milk in the District in the face of statistics showing dairy farmers are receiving less than the cost of production.

Speaking before Baltimor's milk survey committee, Mrs. Wiley, owner of a big dairy farm in Loudoun County, said it was "with poor grace" that the Washington Consumes' Council talks of cheaper milk in view of the figures on production costs.

She said she was heartened somewhat by the statement made by Mrs. John Boyle, jr., which promised every effort to obtain higher incomes for the farmer, lower prices to the consumer and less profits to the distributor.

"Let us not forget," said Mrs. Wiley, chairman of the milk survey committee of Washington, "that in 1929 the producer of milk in this vicinity got 33 cents a gallon, plus premiums, for which the consumer paid 15 cents per quart. Since then there has been a drop of 7 cents a gallon to the farmer, and the retail price of a quart has dropped from 15 cents to 13 cents."

Church's Debts Up to Members

It looks like three trustees of the High Street Baptist Church of Charlottesville, Va., will not have to pay the balance owed on the pipe organ. Instead, the entire membership will do so, the Associated Press reported.

The Supreme Court refused yesterday to pass on the decision of lower courts that notes totaling $12,870 made by the trustees were obligations of the church.

This decision relieved the trustees—H. K. Hawthorne, R. Merritte Robinson and M. L. Rea—of individual liability. It stands.

Suit was brought by the Austin Organ Co. of Maine on the notes which had been made to cover the balance owed on a pipe organ installed by the company.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

Haven for Explorers.

WITH the completion of the new White House executive offices, Washington offers additional lure to the tourist. It takes its place, in fact, with the Shenandoah Caverns in near-by Virginia and Mammoth Cave out in Kentucky as a mecca for amateur explorers. It would not be surprising if the executive offices themselves should not be enough to keep Admiral Byrd and others of that venturesome turn of mind at home. There is no need of going off to the unknown of the South Pole when right here in the Nation's Capital is a labyrinth of corridors and offices that defies the average man to get in and get out.

BARGERON.

Already one finds petrified figures in the recesses, and this in spite of the fact that the building has only been completed a short time. It is believed, however, that they are workmen who lost their way and petrified in the short time because of the high pressure of the New Deal.

Back in there somewhere, as yet unapproached by man, is also Louis Howe. He is a stalactite of the caverns in that he hangs down instead of up. An exploring party started out through the corridors several days ago armed with flashlights and rations to sustain them indefinitely. They have not been heard of since. Another party is organizing in an effort to get to Mr. Roosevelt before the first of the year.

* * * *

Nothing is more interesting than to sit in the lobby and watch breathless groups emerge from a slight penetration of one corridor or another. There is the air of accomplishment mingled with a sense of escape about them, though they probably have been no farther than the office of Steve Early or of Marvin McIntyre.

There are various legendary stories about where some of the corridors run. No one knows for sure where they go, not even the builders or the architects. They are intended simply as a monument to man's ability and willingness to build, as a shining example of what a Nation so richly endowed in natural wealth and manpower can do. Apparently Mr. Roosevelt realized that there are a lot of idle bricks and men in this country and he told the latter to get hold of a lot of bricks and go to work.

Their only frustration was Mr. Roosevelt's return form Warm Springs. Had he remained away longer they could have extended the maze of corridors by spreading it out over Georgetown. They would have had to have more room, though. They couldn't possibly have erected a greater involvment in the given space.

* * * *

There is no point to the corridors, no particular destination, rhyme or reason. It is as if the builders started out with one corridor and strung it around until it had thoroughly run out. Then they took another corridor to wend in and out and over this. They have them interlaced. One can visualize the builders in the end racking their brains to see where they could put another one. There are subway, surface and elevated corridors, corridors to the east and corridors to the west.

They might be called the spokes of a great wheel if they were arranged off some central place, as for example the lobby, and ran straight out. But this is not the case. Some of them have their source at the lobby, and if one could follow them out he would probably find the same lobby was their destination, too. Others seem to begin nowhere and to go to the same place.

* * * *

Mr. Roosevelt said something when he authorized the work about it being possible to remodel the traditional executive offices without altering the fundamental structure, without painting it red. Yet the finished job smacks very much of Russian national planning just the same. We apparently wanted some corridors so we built them without regard to their utility or need. One wouldn't be far wrong to say that we have now in this one network the greatest collection of corridors in the world.

They are understood to represent the architect's conception of the confusion that is the New Deal.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

When a young man named Josef Washington Hall was a governmental observer in China some years back, his confidential reports from the path of a Japanese invading army were signed with the words "Up close." Some of these reports reached the press with the tag words still attached, and copy desks soon bestowed a couple of letters and capitals upon them as a byline. Hence was born Upton Close, a pen name which Mr. Hall has made famous in many a magazine and newspaper article and on many a lecture platform. In some quarters, it is almost too well known. In fact, a Japanese general once asked Mr. Hall to help him lay hands on this Upton Close!

Now 40 years old, Close has spent nearly half of his life in eastern Asia as a newspperman, correspondent and observer of the scene. When he comes now to write of Japan, he gives us no rehashing of other men's huge books, but a picture gathered from his own knowledge, from a thousand informal conversations in Japan and China, and from a vast amount of research in little-known materials.

* * * *

It is important to state this, because Close escapes the pattern which marks most of our other timely and essentially journalistic books on the subject. "Challenge: Behind the Face of Japan" (Farrar & Rinehart, $3), unlike the rest, makes no bogey of Japan. Challenge, threat, danger to the status quo of western nations—all this is clear enough, and Close is too truthful to use the soft pedal. But mysterious bogey, no. For these pages have this particular merit, that they help us to see intimately and understandingly why Japan does what she does.

Occidentals, almost without exception, have simply never understood the Flowery Kingdom. "The basic difference between and the west," writes Close, "was never more evident than in the exasperation of leonine old Briand with foxlike little Yoshizawa at Geneva. How is a mere Western human going to argue with the Oriental executor of a divine mission, in whose veins flows the blood of Amaterasu, Goddess of the Sun?"

That difference in terms, which Close uses for want of better, is very like the theoretic and typical difference between the masculine and the feminine minds. As was the case of ancient Greece, Japan is a "feminine nation"—"intuitive, quick, adaptable, hypersensitive, brave, persistent, conscientious, egocentric, incapable of understanding or accepting the masculine logic of give and take." The Romans found Greece as "difficult" as the West now finds Japan and for very similar reasons.

* * * *

In essence, Close shows that Japan is a nation with medievel concepts and a proved ability to match and even defeat the western nations on their cherished ground of industrial competition.

On the latter point there is a world of illumination in Close's anecdote of the British sea captain who, day after day, while crossing the Pacific, inveighed against Japanese "industrial piracy." On the last day out the captain confidentially showed Close a pair of seaman's boots which he had bought in Yokahama for 75 cents. "They would have cost me $3.50, regulation!" crowed the captain. "And you know my salary has been cut!" Multiply that incident by some millions and Japan's commercial power over the world becomes plain enough.

And specifically medieval is Japan's conscious mission, as phrased last year by that most western of the Japanese and most implacable toward the West, the diplomat, Matsuoka: "The hide-bound, material civilization of the present generation has finally plunged the whole world into its present welter of confusion . . . Our Yamato (Japanese) race has a peerless tradition. We have no business being drunk with European civilization. All we have to do is find the worthy in our own glorious ancient history. Get back to the Japanese spirit, reexamine the national history of 2,000 years! Providence calls on Japan to undertake the mission of delivering humanity from the impasse of modern material civilization."

* * * *

But these points are summaries of a book which is superbly alive with personalities and scenes, narrative and anecdote. From the days of the Japanese gods, ancestors of her royalty and nobility, down to the Tokyo subways ("finest, quietest, and most decent in the world"), Close pictures Japan in all its varied but purposive history.

Here are men so amazing as 80-year-old Toyama, "patriotic supergangster," head of the dreaded Black Dragon Society and sworn blood-brother of Chiang Kai-Shek, and the 95-year-old Prince Saionji, sole surviving "elder statesman," and voice of the "Divine Person," who sits on the lid over Japanese extremists. Warlords, scientists, diplomats, saints and money barons—all shine out from Close's astute descriptions.

* * * *

And the international future? Close sees it as ominous. America and Japan, he states, are like the "couple who have everything to gain by seeing eye to eye and working together—everything to lose through a break. Yet the sane observer, not befogged by sentiment, knows that their basic senses of values, ideas of sportsmanship, spiritual and material hankerings and ambitions in life are so variant that the break must and will come."

But the defeatism of that statement is foresworn by the rest of Close's book, which helps us, at least, to look across the gap of nationality.

Mediterranean Is Topic Tonight

MacDonald Will Deliver Post Travel Lecture.

"Mediterannean Cruise," the eighth of the 1934-35 series of Washington Post travel lectures, will be delivered tonight by Howard B. MacDonald, fellow of the Royal Geographic Society, at the Masonic Auditorium, Thirteenth and New York avenue. This lecture is one of the most popular "travels" scheduled for the series.

Prof. MacDonald, a world traveler, who has visited the many interesting countries which touch the Mediternanean Sea many times, will take his audience on a complete pictorial tour of this region, tracing the pageant of civilization from the prehistoric days to the modern culture of Fascist Italy. Among the many ports of call are the Barbary Coast, Cannes, on the French Riviera, Venice and Athens, Egypt, Malta, the romantic island of Rhodes, the Dalmatian Coast, Messina and the stupendous Temple of Baalbek, in Syria.

Tickets for this lecture and future lectures in this series may be obtained from the business office of The Washington Post or may be purchased at the auditorium on the evening of the lecture. Doors will be opened at 7 p. m., and the lecture will begin promptly at 8:15 p. m. This lecture will be fully illustrated with colored slides.

Religious Women

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

MARY PICKFORD'S theology, is, as might be expected, very simple, but it has the enormous advantage of being practically workable. It is born, not of theory, but of experience.

Her tiny book is called "Why Not Try God?" and is written in language that is as simple as it is sincere. It is a confession of faith. In her own words—"My discovery was so wonderful and has brought me so much joy, given me so much spiritual light in the hardest hours of my life, that I want to share it with all who care to try it."

* * * *

Last summer, just before she died, Mary Austin published a little book on "Prayer," which I discussed in this column; she expressed the results of her experience in communication with the Unseen. She had no doubt whatever that by prayer she did not only strengthen her character subjectively, but that the evidences of the divine response were valid.

And here is another witness. For Mary Pickford is not an advocate, she is a witness. She is not trying to prove her case or to convince the reader by argument. She is simply giving her own testimony; and we know that in any court of law, a good witness is of more value than an eloquent attorney.

* * * *

Her name is so universally known that her sufferings as well as her successes are in the pitiless light of publicity; she speaks of these matters with dignity and tact. Her book, like that of Mary Austin, is no more than it claims to be. It is not propaganda for any definite religious sect or creed, but is most positive in its assertion of the results that come from personal communion with God.

It is one more bit of evidence—if any were needed—of the undying spirit of religion in the human heart. Man is incurably religious; and it is impossible to imagine any time in the future when he will be anything else.

Compulsory Auto Insurance Urged

West Virginia Group Also Asks Lower Gas Tax.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.). Request is made of the West Virginia Legislature for enactment of a State compulsory motor vehicle insurance law by the West Virginia Motor Truck Association in resolutions adopted at a meeting held here by members from all over the State.

The body also asks the Legislature to lower gasoline and motor taxation and the national Congress for a uniform law for weight, height and length limitations of motor vehicles.

The association appointed a legislative committee and a special subcommittee to assist in waging a campaign for the laws sought. Cal F. Young, of Charleston, its managing director, is chairman of both.

Settlement Reached In Auto Crash Suit

Richmond, Dec. 10 (Spl.).—An out-of-court agreement was reached today before hearing on a suit for $50,000 damages brought by Francis H. Dewey, of Suffern, N. Y., against George C. Mr. Dewey asked damages for injuries received when an automobile in which he was riding was in collision with a truck belonging to the defendants on the highway between Fredericksburg and Culpeper on April 2.

Political Structure Throttles Economics

New Deal Confusions Increased by Dominance of Local Over National Interests.

By Elliott Thurston.

CONTEMPLATION of the confusions within the New Deal as well as in general political and economic thought invariably leads at some point to the question of whether under our present political structure and Constitution a workable national policy is possible of formulation and successful execution.

The conflict between national and local interests, conspicuously exemplified in the tariff, is a basic cause of the failure both of the New Deal and political rivals to devise a national program and policy with any hope of success. The New Deal's constant reply to demands for this or that action, which is recognized by economists everywhere as economically sound and imperative, is that it is politically impossible.

That is true of the tariff, of stabilization, of budget-balancing, of "sound money," of silver, of the bonus, of labor problems and innumerable others. It is the rule, in fact, rather than the exception that the political organization of the country compels constant, unsatisfactory compromises, and causes repeated failure to adopt economically sane and sound policy. It lies at the bottom of often-heard conclusions that the capitalistic system can no longer be made to work in the United States, or that the Constitution is obsolete, or that the Supreme Court must keep its hands off "social and economic progress" regardless of the Constitution, or that the Constitution and the political organization of the country must be "modernized."

Any Administration which undertakes to devise and enforce a given national policy is bound to encounter resistance and often frustration because Congress is a composite of local interests. An Administration which yields to a succession of local interests can have no national policy. The New Deal's difficulties in evolving a national policy have been vastly increased because the New Deal has already yielded to a succession of group interests. National interest has been sacrificed in many cases. And local interests, once gratified, not only crave for more but will resist more stubbornly than ever the surrender of favors, which are not in the national interest.

* * * *

THE situation is well set forth by Sumner H. Slichter, professor of Business Economics at Harvard in a newly published volume, "Towards Stability." He emphasizes that "Mr. Roosevelt's 'New Deal,' admirable though it in some respects, has yielded disappointing results precisely because it represents, not an integrated program, but a series of self-defeating attempts to confer favors on too many special groups.

"The Administration has endeavored to help labor by giving it higher wages, to help employers by giving them a chance to combine and end 'destructive price cutting,' to help the farmers by paying them to restrict production. At the end of a year of helping everyone, the country is (September, 1934) spending about 5 per cent more money, but paying about 10 per cent higher prices and buying about 5 per cent less goods than a year ago."

"But although millions of people," he adds, "believe that they have been very definitely helped by the Administration and can point to concrete benefits to support their belief, these same people are somewhat baffled to find that all the help given to many different groups in the community has somehow failed to do the essential thing—namely, to accelerate recovery.

"This is indeed a crucial problem in Government intervention—to develop a program which is integrated and not self-defeating . . . The very fact that the Government is intervening in economic matters stimulates special interests to organize, and the more completely the Government embarks upon the policy of control the greater will be efforts of these interests to control the Government."

IN examining the political structure Prof. Slichter concludes that "the Government as now organized is not capable of formulating a policy of intervention which will be satisfactory in the long run." He believes, as many other observers do, that political action dominated by local, sectional, bloc interest inevitably is irreconcilable, more often than not, with the best national interest and that until political parties are capable of making national rather than local interests prevail the Government is incapable of successful economic "intervention" and control.

He calls the Constitution obsolete, from this viewpoint. He contends that its roots, grounded in a theory of protecting the sovereignty of the States, prevent the Government from having a national policy and being held responsible for its acts. Even more, he believes that unless the structure of Congress is modified so that State, sectional, bloc interests do not dominate and frustrate national policy, successful Government direction of national policy is in the main impossible.

* * * *

AS long as frontiers were expanding, population rapidly increasing and markets for more and more goods existed, the old system worked. With all this changed, with the Government attempting to dictate price levels, hours, wages, working conditions, farm income, production, banking, credit and monetary policies, he believes the confusion and conflict between national and local interests presents an almost hopeless situation.

Prof. Slichter, as an economist, lands where many constitutional lawyers do—in recommending as one improvement authority for the President to veto individual items in bills. It would go far in giving the President a disciplinary power over his party in Congress. It would curb, if not end, the power of blocs and special interests. He would also abolish the separation between the executive and legislative branches in order to achieve unity of responsibility. He would adapt the British system, so far as it calls for a dissolution and election when the Government fails to command a majority. However, what is important is the objective rather than the steps to achieve it. The object would be so to revise the political system that responsible party Government founded on the national policy instead of a combination of compromises with conflicting local interests would be possible.

Otherwise, he concludes with many other students of the situation, that even if an Administration is able to decide on national policies it would be unable to make them effective.

Taxation.
(With special reference to cities having a sales tax.)

There's a tax when I phone
And a tax when I wire;
There's a tax on my steam heat
And fireplace fire.

There's a tax on my lights
And a tax on my books;
And if I would fish
There's a tax on the hooks.

There's a tax on my hat
And a tax on each shoe,
There's a tax on my shirt
And my other clothes, too.

There's a tax on bridge whist
And a tax on grand slams;
At night in my sleep
I am taxed for "pajams."

There's a tax upon cards
When I play solitaire;
Oh, there must be a tax
On the sun and the air.

There's a tax upon music,
A tax upon song,
A tax upon dancing,
A tax on ping-pong.

There's an impost on eating,
And vain are appeals
If you eat and drink where
There's music with meals.

There't a tax on that oil
I rub into my hair,
A tax on the tooth paste
I use with such care.

I'm taxed when I gargle,
And if I get ill,
I'm taxed when I swallow
A capsule or pill.

I'm taxed when I'm sleeping
And taxed when I'm not,
I'm taxed when it's cold and
I'm taxed when it's hot.

I'm taxed when out riding
And taxed when I talk,
And levies on shoes make Me taxed when I walk.

They tax all the money
I earn, steal or win,
And then tax me plenty
For blowing it in.

They sock me for living
Right straight in the eye,
And, boy, how they rob me
The day that I die!

How about getting to those Russian Soviet leaders after some of those wholesale executions and interviewing them on what they like to call the bloody days of the czars?

Safeguards on Snow Taken.

Awakening yesterday morning to find a blanket of snow and ice on all county highways, motorists were greatly relieved to find that the road forces had covered all hills with a heavy coat of sand.

The road department was commended by County Manager Roy S. Braden for having been prepared for such weather by placing piles of sand on the side of all hills in the county. He stated last night that he hopes the practice of having plenty of sand ready for such emergencies will be followed throughout the winter.

No accidents were reported from the office of Sheriff Howard B. Fields.

Despite the stormy weather John Crack erected 50 Christmas trees along Wilson boulevard yesterday in preparations for the "Santa Claus Lane" being sponsored by the Clarendon Business Men's Association.

Clubwomen Hear National President

Mrs. Poole Urges Study of Present-Day Trends.

The serious study of present-day problems by clubwomen instead of progress devoted to art and literature was advocated by Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, National president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, at a meeting of the Woman's Community Club, of Kensington, yesterday afternoon at the Masonic Hall in Kensington, Md.

The federation, she asserted, can remain a live power in the Nation and retain its position as "the greatest group of homemaking women in the country" only if the women give serious consideration to present-day trends and happenings.

Mrs. Poole's speech followed a luncheon at which State officers and presidents of the clubs affiliated with the county federation and the Woman's Club, of Kensington, were guests. The meeting and luncheon was presided over by Mrs. Morris K. Barroll, president of the Community Club.

Addresses of welcome were made by Mrs. Rudolph E. Allen, president of the Maryland State Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. B. Peyton Whalen, president of the Montgomery County Federation, and Mrs. George Landick, jr., president of the Woman's Club, of Kensington. The invocation was by the Rev. Thomas F. Opie, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church at Olney. Mrs. Opie was soloist, giving a group of songs. The music section of the club sang under the direction of Mrs. Henry Milburn.

Virginia's Capitol Square

This is the tenth of a series outlining the function of the Virginia State government and giving the views of the department heads on their work.

By Warren A. McNeill
(Associated Press Staff Writer).

Richmond, Va., Dec. 10.—The organization through which the State board of education keeps close check on the way public education activities are carried on throughout Virginia is described by Dr. Sidney B. Hall, superintendent of public instruction, as one intended to give the largest possible freedom, while at the same time maintaining necessary uniformity and insuring compliance with State laws.

In the department offices at Richmond are general supervisors who lay down policies and confer with and receive reports from supervisors in each county who pay frequent visits to classrooms and observe the effectiveness of teaching being done in elementary schools. A State high school supervisor holds group meetings with school principals and also makes sure that high school courses are properly arranged to give graduates credits needed to enter standard colleges. A supervisor of Negro education performs similar functions for elementary and high schools for Negroes and a supervisor of physical and health education makes frequent trips over the State to see that these aspects of child life are being properly recognized in the public schools.

All of these, however, constitute only one division of the department of education—that dealing with instruction.

Higher Education Division.

There is also the division of higher education which is directly responsible for supervision of the State teachers' colleges and the Virginia College for Negroes. Presidents of these institutions are given a free hand in planning their policies, but in abolishing the individual boards under which they previously operated the General Assembly charged the board of education with the task of directing them. The customary procedure is for presidents of the colleges to make quarterly reports which are analyzed, discussed and approved at meetings with the State board of education. This division of the department also handles the matter of certification of teachers, thus coming in touch with every college in the State, whether public or private.

Dr. Hall pointed out that whereas in some States individual institutions may issue teachers' certificates, this is a function of the board of education in Virginia and uniform requirements must be met by all who wish to teach in the State.

The division of school buildings not only inspects to see that every building complies with requirements of law as to sanitation, ventilation, lighting and other matters, but also furnishes building plans to local officials who request them. Advice also is given, when asked on questions of equipment and supplies to be purchased by local schools.

Libraries, Textbooks Unit.

The division of school libraries and textbooks checks on the use by schools of textbooks adopted by the board, sees that book contracts are complied with and promotes the development of libraries in schools. "This division is becoming increasingly important," says Dr. Hall, "since the library is developing into the heart of the school, just as reading is the heart of the curriculum. We spend a lot of time and effort teaching children how to read. Having done that, we must furnish them with something to read."

The division of vocational education's main contribution is to the out-of-school group of young persons. It supervises projects for offering educational opportunities in the fields of agriculture, trade and industry, particularly under those programs in which the Federal Government cooperates, and seeks to see that boys and girls not interested in or equipped for the so-called classical courses may have the more practical training needed to fit them for immediate responsibilities of life.

Division of Research.

And, finally, there is the division of research and finance, which conducts studies to bring out weak and strong points in the education system, makes studies of such matters as attendance, enrollment, progress and pupil achievement. It also provides statistical studies to meet requests from within the department or by localities. It supervises the expenditure of all State school funds and checks to see that State laws covering collection of taxes and subsequent division of school funds are carried out properly.

(In the next article of this series, to be published by The Post on Thursday, Dr. Hall tells how and why the much discussed "new curriculum," or revised course of study, came into being.)

Pythian Chief To Visit Lodge At Alexandria

$9,040 Given to Fund for Needy; Snow Hinders Traffic.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 323.

Walter W. Clements, district deputy grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias for the Eighth district, will pay an official visit to Oriental Lodge, No. 6, at 8 o'clock tonight in Pythian Temple on Cameron street.

Mr. Clements will be accompanied by several grand lodge officers, it is understood, this being an official Eighth district meeting, as well as by delegations from other lodges in the district.

W. R. Tatspaugh, grand chancellor of Oriental Lodge, has extended an invitation to all present and former members to attend.

The Alexandria United Charities has received a number of additional contributions since the last report. According to D. C. Book, chairman, the amount so far contributed in cash and pledges amounts to $9,040.47. This, according to Mr. Book, is far short of the amount which will be required for the work of the organization during the winter.

An organization meeting was held last night in the Virginia Public Service Building, for the purpose of discussing the winter's work.

Traffic on the streets of Alexandria and roads leading to the city was greatly impeded yesterday and last night by the heavy snowfall, several accidents being reported. A general tie-up of traffic on the Richmond-Washington highway at Snake Hill, 3 miles south of Alexandria, was reported. Several cars, including a truck loaded with cases of beer, were overturned. No one was seriously injured.

Lawrence Williams, president of the Washington Skeet Club, and R. C. Clinard will give an exhibition and lecture on hunters' guns at the meeting of the Alexandria Rotary Club at 12:30 o'clock today in the George Mason Hotel.

The program is in charge of Francis H. Fannon, a former president of the club. President Lawrence E. Roland will preside.

The lights of "Santa Claus Lane," on King street from Royal to Alfred, were turned on yesterday evening, and merchants within that zone will keep their stores open until 9 p. m. Beginning on Monday, next, all stores will remain open until 10 p. m. until Christmas.

In answering an alarm of fire in an outbuilding at the home of H. G. McCartney, on Russell road, yesterday morning at 7 o'clock, the engine of Engine Company, No. 2, skidded and broke an axle. It was in charge of Chief Engineer Thomas Cockrell.

The hearing by the finance committee of City Council on the 1935 budget, set for last night in the Corporation Court room, was postponed until tomorrow night at 7:30, in the same place. At this meeting the committee will consider the police and fire appropriations.

Club Changes Relief Plans

Silver Spring Lions to Spend Its Food Fund Elsewhere.

Abandonment of its annual practice of distributing baskets to needy of the community at Christmas was announced yesterday by the board of directors of the Silver Spring Lions Club. For the past several years the club has distributed about 30 baskets of food just before the holidays.

The board's decision, it was said, was based on the fact that many families, aided in this manner in the past, are now being cared for by Government and other relief agencies. It is planed to utilize the funds ordinarily expended in the care of several families in need of more than foodstuffs and to extend this service beyond the holiday time and to the extent of the club's resources. The names of two such indigent families are scheduled for aid of this type.

Plans are being made by the club for its second annual charity ball in Washington February 8. The ball is the organization's principal means of raising funds for its service work and will be held on an elaborate scale.

The drive for the ball will launched officially at a ladies' night meeting December 18. There will be a prominent speaker and program of entertainment.

Headed by the president, Arthur L. Blakeslee, the committee in charge of the ball is composed of F. Joseph Weber, Tallman W. Peel, J. Howell Forsyth, Harry J. Trainor, Dr. James J. Hanan, Walter B. Crossan, Raymond C. Williams, David D. Harger and E. F. McDevitt.

Aid Duplication To Be Avoided By County Plan

Mrs. Edler Asks Givers to Notify Welfare Bureau at Fairfax.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 126-J.

Welfare officials of Fairfax County, Va., are endeavoring to avoid duplication in the distribution of Christmas gifts and other relief, Mrs. Pearl Edler, county welfare director, has asked all organizations or community groups who plan to dispense Christmas charity privately to send their baskets through the local welfare office or notify her of those to whom they plan to extend aid.

County officials have also issued an appeal for donations of money, clothing, food and other articles needed for relief work. It is anticipated that the demands this winter will be much larger than in previous years. Toys for children are specially needed.

Mrs. Edler stated yesterday that in the past it has frequently occurred that many private individuals and organizations have distributed food and gifts to needy famlies who have also received similar help from the welfare department and it is this duplication her office is seeking to avoid so that more familes can be given help.

All private donors, however, are not asked to send their gifts through the county office, but merely see that the name of the family aided is known to the welfare officials. Any one may send their gifts to the county office for distribution.

Through the cooperation of the various church, charity, civic and community organizations, the county welfare authorities are hoping to extend Christmas cheer to all poor families in the county but to do so it has been pointed out, the welfare department must know of the private donations.

The monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of Fairfax County, Va., will be held this evening in the Fairfax Courthouse when Mrs. Pearl Edler, county welfare director, will be the principal speaker.

Mrs. Edler plans to discuss county welfare and relief problems, outlining proposed methods of relief distribution and cooperation with local community organizations in supervising in the care of needy families.

The Truro Club, consisting of the younger members of the Truro Episcopal Church of Fairfax, Va., will meet tonight in the parish hall to plan activities for the Christmas and New Year holidays.

The Parent-Teacher Association of Herndon, Va., will meet tonight in the auditorium of the Herndon High School. Miss Irene Raver, supervisor of the Abbott School in Washington will speak on child welfare. The entertainment program will be provided by the pupils of the fifth grade under the direction of Mrs. Ernest Gibson.

Bankers to Act On Big 'Deficit' In Montgomery

Will Meet With Board Tonight to Consider Remedial Steps.

Representatives of Montgomery County's 12 banks will meet tonight with the board of county commissioners to consider steps to meet the estimated county deficit of nearly half a million dollars at the close of the present fiscal year. The deficit was predicted by the three Fusion members—Frank H. Karn, Paul M. Coughlan and Charles E. King.

The estimated deficit is based on a financial statement prepared by County Accountant Alexander K. Hancock at the direction of the board. It has been denied by Robert D. Hagner and Richard H. Lansdale, Democratic members of the board.

A report also will be made by Commissioner Coughlan on the probable cost of an audit of certain county accounts. Coughlan was directed to obtain this information at the last meeting of the board, at which time the advisability of auditing accounts of the State Roads Commission affecting the county also was considered.

The board now has authority to issue up to $300,000 in emergency bonds for a period not to exceed five years and also to issue short-term certificates of indebtedness in an amount not exceeding $700,000, which are available to meet the estimated deficit, if a market can be found. It is expected the bankers will advise the board tonight regarding the possibility of disposing of securities of this type and whether or not the county banks will purchase any of them.

Democratic members of the board insist the deficit will not exceed $150,000, much of which, they say, is due to the fact that the county will not receive any gasoline-tax funds this year. They point out that county bonds and certificates of indebtedness found a receptive market under the past Democratic administration and are inclined to minimize the danger unless financial houses are "frightened" away by adverse publicity given the alleged deficit.

McCarter Tells Jury of Scheme To 'Fix' Taxes

Investigation Is Expected to Be Completed Today.

The District grand jury is expected to conclude today its investigation of the alleged attempts of a small group of Treasury Department employes to "fix" the income tax returns of Thomas N. McCarter, New Jersey public utilities magnate.

Under the direction of Assistant United States Attorney George McNeill, the grand jury yesterday heard from McCarter his story of how he was approached regarding a plan whereby he could obtain a substantial reduction in a tax assessment if he would retain certain persons.

McCarter, who has been termed by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau a "public-spirited citizen" for telling of the plan, voluntarily appeared before the grand jury yesterday. He remained in the room about an hour and when he left he had no comment to make.

Other witnesses yesterday were agents of the Internal Revenue Intelligence Unit, some of whom listened in on the discussions preceding exposure of the plan, and on whose recommendations two employes were released. Since then two others have been dismissed, and the others allegedly implicated, two tax consultants, have been barred from practicing before the bureau.

Mr. McNeill said he merely got past the preliminary stage of the investigation yesterday. He said that his study had not yet demonstrated how many indictments would be sought.

Sprague in Favor Of Private Building

Ex-Brain Truster for Boom in Low-Cost Homes.

Boston, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—A Nation-wide building boom, aimed to provide decent homes at rock-bottom prices "for the mass of the people, for those, let us say, unable to pay more than a rent of $30 a month," would contribute perhaps more than any other single means toward trade recovery, Prof. O. M. W. Sprague, of Harvard business school, said in an address here today.

Asserting the principle that private capital rather than Government funds should finance the program, the noted economist, a former brain-truster who split with the Administration on the monetary question, remarked:

"I feel very doubtful about the outcome of large Government expenditures in this field because I consider it essential that construction costs be reduced and I doubt whether such reduction would take place if building on a large scale is undertaken under Government auspices. I am inclined to believe that Government assistance, whether Federal or local, might well be limited to slum clearance projects."

Charges Divorce Was Illegal.

Under the proposed distribution, Mrs. Smith's daughter would receive $9,000,000; Miss Holman, $750,000, and her son $6,000,000. The remainder would go to the brother and sisters to be used for charitable purposes.

Although asserting that when she obtained a Reno divorce from Reynolds she was following his directions, thinking it "right and proper," Mrs. Smith said it was illegal because he was a minor and a resident of North Carolina with guardians in this State. Under the circumstances, she said, the divorce was contrary to the laws of North Carolina and to decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

The illegality of the divorce, she charged, was known to Miss Holman, who was "versed in the law." Before she became a Broadway "torch singer," Miss Holman studied law at the University of Cincinnati.

Whitney Hails National Value Of Wall Street

Asserts Higher Standard of Living Result of Exchange.

Chicago Dec. 10 (U.P.).—Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, tonight defended Wall street against the traditional mistrust of farmer, laborer and small business man by attributing to its operations increased wages, a higher standard of living and lower cost to the farmer who ships his product.

At a dinner of the Chicago Asciation of Stock Exchange Firms he defended the securities exchange system, demanded for the securities' capitalism and, protesting moves toward "injurious restraint" of the system, demand for the securities owner the same right to exercise his judgment as "the worker in the disposition of his services and the farmer in the direction of his endeavors."

"It is direct kin," he said, "to the right of the farmer to change his crops, to introduce new blood into his herds, to use new machinery. The working man and the farmer both seek to improve their material position."

System of Free Choice.

"The system of free choice, under which this Nation has achieved its amazing material progress," he declared, "has on any fair, broad test, justified itself. The security markets have played a vital part in achieving that success.

"To realize the further promise of our system, security markets are indispensable. It is the duty of every intelligent citizen to maintain these markets inviolable against the mischievous proposals of misguided visionaries. In so doing it is the conservative and not the radical who best assures a higher standard of material welfare for all our people."

A study of railroad financing over a period of 31 years, Whitney said, showed the cost of raising funds through the stock exchanges averages 5.5 per cent of the amount raised. He compared this to a 16 per cent financing cost for home construction, without benefit of securities exchanges.

Organized Market's Value.

Had the carriers which needed capital been forced to depend on unorganized markets for subsequent trading, Whitney continued, "the rate on the funds would have been higher or the proceeds less, or both."

"It would have been necessary to maintain charges at a higher or wages at a lower level in order to compensate for the higher costs of capital. The higher rates would have been a burden upon the shipper, often a farmer. The lower wages for railroad employes would have meant a lower standard of living."

Capital has provided a buffer for the employe against the consequence of failure, Whitney contended. While employes are certain of their income, he said, the entire risk of enterprise is concentrated upon capital.

"I have yet to hear anyone suggest," he said, "that the losses incurred in new ventures should be shared by the worker.

"During the past five years it has been necessary for an increasing proportion of the corporations to dig into their capital reserves to meet wage, material and tax costs that could not be paid from income. A study which recently came to my attention shows that American business in the three-year period, 1930 to 1932, paid out $23,000,000,000 more than it received.

"This sum was derived from previous accumulations and had it not been made readily available by the owners of business, I hesitate to think what the depression might have been."

Bullet Kills Man In Union Station

Sistie and Buzzie Open Sled Season At White House

Clad in bright red snow suits, "Sistie" and "Buzzie" Dall yesterday helped open the sledding season in Washington when they appeared on the White House rear grounds for an afternoon's frolic in the snow.

It was the first snowfall of the year, and the President's two grandchildren wanted to make the most of it. They coasted down the gentle slopes behind the Executive Mansion, while Lizzie McDuffie, their nurse, stood guard.

$10,000,000 Alloted For U. S. Forest Land

Secretary Dern, president of the National Forest Reservation Commission, announced yesterday the allocation of $10,000,000 by President Roosevelt for purchase of additional lands for national forests, according to the Associated Press.

The allocation, made from emergency conservation work funds, is the second to be provided, $20,000,000 having been set aside on July 21, 1933, for the purchase of 6,000,000 acres of forest land. The first allocation has already been exhausted.

Dr. Mary Hays Heads Survey Of Idle Youths

Plans Revealed for Study of Conditions Among Unemployed.

Miss Katherine Lenroot, newly appointed chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, made public her plans for a survey and study of the condition of unemployed young people in the country at Mrs. Roosevelt's press conference at the White House yesterday.

Miss Lenroot, who was accompanied by Dr. Mary Hays, of the Vocational Bureau, New York City, declared the Children's Bureau was "tremendously interested" in the problem of unemployed youth, and stated that Dr. Hays had been made a temporary member of the Children's Bureau staff to direct the survey.

The plan, in brief, is to consider ways and means to evaluate previous programs of assisting unemployed youth, consultation between various Government bureaus dealing with unemployed youth and to make the results of the bureau's findings available to communities and cities that have to deal with such issues.

Three Millions Idle.

Three million people between the ages of 16 and 21 years at the present time, Dr. Hays declared, are without work and out of school.

"These youth," Dr. Hays pointed out, "have graduated into an industrial world that doesn't want them. They are chief sufferers from the NRA codes and the situation is taking from them their courage, initiative and the feeling that anything is worth while."

It was pointed out by one of the speakers that often young people are misunderstood in their homes, their parents feeling they could find work if they searched hard enough for it.

CCC Held Success.

Miss Lenroot said she felt something must be done to take care of those over 16 in the way of more educational activities until they could enter the industrial world.

In response to a question from Mrs. Roosevelt, Dr. Hays expressed the opinion that the CCC camps had been a real success in helping the members hold their own, assist their families, and also that the training was an aid in obtaining jobs after leaving the camps.

Brothers' Quarrel Brings Death to 1

Another Wounded, Third Is Held in Virginia.

Christiansburg, Va., Dec. 10 (AP). A single charge from a shotgun said to have been fired by one brother sent another to death and a third to a hospital near here late last night.

The dead man was Walter Walters, a young farmer, who lived a few miles east of this town. The wounded man, Harry Walters, a filling station employe, received enough shot practically to amputate his left hand and the right was severely lacerated. Howard Walters is in jail here charged with the shooting.

Montgomery County officers tonight found nothing to add to their knowledge of the tragedy gained in investigations last night and this morning. The shooting occurred at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wade Walters, parents of the brothers involved. Officers were told that Howard and Walter Waters, the latter of whom lived with his wife near the parents' home, had quarreled a greater part of Sunday afternoon and evening and that during this trouble, Howard had shot at Walter.

Eggnog Party Held at Home Of Mr. Hewes

Mrs. Buckley Shares the Honors With Miss Nash.

Group of Distinguished Guests Present at Affair.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

From 5 until 7 o'clock last evening was a pretty desperate time, what with cars skidding on the ice and snow and trucks slithering into the most careful drivers' cars, but in spite of these trials a delightful group turned up at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Hewes, on Massachusetts avenue, for cocktails, or rather eggnog. Mrs. Hewes is lingering in New York, where she arrived several weeks ago with Mr. Hewes after a five months' trip in Europe, where they visited in Russia, France, Italy and finally England.

"Buzzie," as Mr. Hewes is known to his close friends, was formerly a member of the Foreign Service, and his last post was Latvia. After his resignation from the Department of State Mr. Hewes, with his wife, came to Washington, where they renovated the charming home on Massachusetts avenue.

The party yesterday was given for two friends, whom Mr. Hewes has known for many years: Mrs. Paul Buckley, the former Miss Tanchita Mejia, daughter of the late former Minister of Salvador, Senor Federico Mejia, who is spending the winter in the Capital with her small daughter, and renewing friendships of several years ago; and Miss Caroline Nash, who with her mother has recently returned to the Capital for the winter.

Rare Collection of Art.

Bright fires were burning in the house, and as guests greeted the host and guests of honor they paused to warm hands and feet before the blazing grate, and then turned to the dining room, where the tea table was loaded with delicious things, including the huge bowls of eggnog and tiny sandwiches made of old Virginia ham from Mrs. Mark L. Bristol's shop. And Mrs. Bristol, with the Admiral, was there, as usual the center of a group of friends, for there are no two people in the world who know as many persons and have as many friends as have the former United States High Commissioner to Turkey and Mrs. Bristol.

In the drawing room where the guests were received, is a rare collection of Chinese art, which Mr. Hewes picked up during the years he spent in the Orient. Blue velvet furniture, and draperies of old gold Chinese brocade make a handsome setting for the ancient prints, delicate vases of incredibly thin china, and the fine pieces of jade and quartz which are placed at points of vantage.

At the tea table, for a while, Mrs. Thomas Holcombe, the former Miss Beatrice Clover, and Mrs. McChord Boyle, presided. There were others who took turns.

Mrs. Hurley Attends.

Among the guests were Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley, wife of the former Secretary of War, more beautiful than ever in a black frock with a Russian turban of Persian lamb, and her silvery blonde hair curling over the edges of it in a most intriguing manner; Mrs. Bowler Hull, another of Washington's beautiful matrons, also in black, and most charming.

Mr. Arthur Bradley Campbell, just down from New York for a few days before coming here to spend the remainder of the winter, being greeted on all sides with welcomes and inquiries for his mother, the Marchioness of Huntley. Mr. Walter Thurston, of the State Department, who recently returned to our midst after spending three years in the Brazilian capital. Mr. Thurston was formerly chief of the Latin-American Division of the Department of State.

Others glimpsed in the cheery gathering were the Misses Patten, Miss Marion Trumbull in a smart outfit of black with a blouse of palest pink and a black velvet hat; the Charge d'Affaires of Bulgaria and Mme. Petroff, with Mlle. Marie Petroff; the Secretary of the Swedish Legation, Mr. Carl Borgenstierna; the Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. H. H. Simms; Mr. Dan Olney, that charming young sculptor who is intriguing Washington with his work as well as his personality; Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Snow, Mr. Broadmead, of the British Embassy; Mr. Ralph Hill, always a delightful person to meet, and the Minister of Persia and Mme. Djalal.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Betty Angus is another of those industrious and energetic souls who mix debuting and studying—and in this case with success. The other morning—she had on a becoming black and white ensemble and a lacquer red cossack hat—we were chatting about studies and such things and she not only is going to G. W. (as I find surprisingly many doing), but is majoring in English, of all things.

Some people have names of famous people and others look like them, but Doug Smith combines both. He not only carries the first name of a popular cinema star, but resembles the same young gentleman to an extraordinary degree.

We haven't really seen anything of Nancy Berry since her trip to the Hawaiian Islands, for ever since her return she has been going off to the South for a visit, or here or there. At present she is out at Selfridge Field visiting her sister and is having a marvelous time with the "higher society"—the Wingers. Nancy has to come East, though, to be in Gene Kincheloe's wedding next Saturday—and after that we in the Capital are promised at least a fleeting glimpse of her.

Cream Serves As Protector Against Cold

By Ruth Anne Davis.

NO WOMAN'S dressing table is complete this time of the year without a small jar of protective cream. It's that ounce of prevention which wards off chapping. No matter how painstakingly you pat on your powder and apply your rouge, your skin is not going to be as lovely as it could be unless you make every effort to insure a smooth surface.

A cream which is put out by one of the most reliable beauty houses acts not only as a protector against weather extremities, but serves also as a powder base. One small dab of it rubbed over the face is almost immediately absorbed by the skin. Then comes the powder. You'll be surprised how well it adheres and how long it remains on such a perfect foundation. Rouge as well. Ordinarily cake rouge lasts only so long but over cream it will "stay put" for hours.

The cream supplies those oils which the skin lacks during cold weather. It forms a light invisible coating that keeps the chill winds from chapping.

One jar of it costs very little and you'll find that it will go a long way and save you the embarrassment of a rough skin.

Inexpensive Gift Suggestion.

Recently a reader called in and gave a sensible suggestion. "It isn't so difficult," she said, "to find gifts for $1 or $5, but where can we find them for 25 and 50 cents?"

There are times when you feel that you'd like to do more than send a Christmas card, and yet you don't feel as though you'd like to give an ordinary gift. What you want is just some small remembrance.

In the toilet goods department of a downtown store there are small packages of bath salts wrapped in bright cellophane. Just one of these is sufficient to give a delightful fragrance to a tub of water. Six of these cost 25 cents. Larger boxes containing 12 packages cost 50 cents.

They're so attractively done up and so useful you won't hesitate when you see them.

Russian Bedroom Slippers.

Years ago a small Washington shop carried some Russian bedroom slippers made of real leather, and trimmed with leather dyed in bright colors. For a time the line was discontinued but recently upon the request of many customers more slippers were ordered. These are now on display.

Because the leather is an exceptionally fine quality and securely hand sewn one pair lasts for years. They're just as comfortable to wear around the house and always look trim and neat.

If you're looking for something unusual in the way of gifts, these slippers might fill the ticket. They are most attractive and modestly priced.

Cashmere Scarfs.

All the way from France to Washington came those adorable cashmere scarfs featured in a local shop. While it's easy enough to find soft silky scarfs, it's a job indeed to find any as soft and silky as these—unless you know where to look.

They are triangular pieces which fit close around the neck with the center point down in front and the other two corners looped in back. The hand-blocked designs and color combinations are strikingly different.

Young Folks' Screen Styles.

The recent popularity of child stars has done things to styles. There was a time when the little girls' dresses were just so and only adults wanted their clothes with a cinema touch or two. All that is changed. Children's taste match the grown-ups as you'll see if you visit a certain local store.

Here is a whole table devoted to the young folks "screen styles." Dresses here are duplicates of dresses which little stars have worn in recent movies. With each dress goes a quaint rag doll wearing a "screen style" frock, too.

Dresses and dolls are only $1.95.

Gift Suggestions for Men.

Lipstick and Rouge.

Matching your rouge and lipstick is just another difficult make-up problem which has been simplified by a certain beauty expert. She offers a set of lipstick and rouge in companion colors, put up in cream and blue containers for a very reasonable price.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 105, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Culbertson on Bridge

An Unusual Entry-Killing Play.

Judging from the Bridge situation in the New York clubs, the depression must be over, for a large proportion of part-score hands are being optimistically bid to game and not a few hands which should be played at game are being bid to Slam contracts. Perhaps, with the rapid growth of the science of play, prospective declarers are becoming overconfident and forgetting that the defending players are learning a few tricks too. On today's hand, though the declarer hit upon the best play to make his over-optimistic Slam contract, the West player saw exactly what he was about and, in defiance of convention, made the only play which would defeat the bid.

South, Dealer
Neither side vulnerable

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	2♣	Pass
3♡	Pass	4♣	Pass
4♠	Pass	5♣	Pass
6♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

The fault in reaching this slam of course was almost entirely that of the South player. Over two clubs South should not have forced with three hearts but should have bid four spades, at which point the bidding would probably have died. South's optimistic bidding, particularly in view of the void in his partner's suit, is hard to account for.

At any rate, South found himself at a six-spade contract and West made the best possible opening, the spade ten. South saw that his contract could be fulfilled if the diamond finesse worked, as with two entries to dummy, the clubs could be set up no matter who had the Ace. Thus a heart finesse and break did not seem to be necessary. This line of play would have worked had not the West player arisen magnificently to the occasion.

On the low diamond lead at Trick 4 West stopped to review the situation. He knew from South's diamond play that the South hand must be void of clubs, for otherwise that suit would have been tackled immediately. It was obvious to West, therefore, that South was going to try to set up the club suit and to do so he needed to find two diamond entries to dummy. Consequently West, on the low diamond lead, contrary to all elementary rules of defensive play, jumped up with his diamond King.

This was a play that could not lose. If East held the Queen it would always make, as from the bidding it was clear that East could not possibly have a singleton diamond. On the other hand, if South's original diamond holding was the Queen-small and not three or more diamonds, the play of the King would definitely shut out South's second entry to dummy

When West jumped up with his diamond King, South was stymied. He had to change his campaign immediately, so after winning with the diamond Ace he went after the heart suit. But, though the hearts were divided 3-3, the King was not correctly located, and as a result South had to lose two heart tricks and went down one. Of course, had West played a low diamond, the Jack in dummy would have won the trick. The King of clubs could then have been led through East and now the Ace of diamonds would have provided reentry to run the dummy's set up clubs and seven would have been made.

How to Keep Well

The Endocrine Glands.

Part 1.

AN automobile that operates smoothly with all parts synchronizing is a marvelous mechanism. Take away the carburetor and you have a functionless, dead machine; have something go wrong with the distributor and your car will not run.

The human body is organized on a far more intricate plan than the most complicated machine, and we are learning almost daily of new processes that occur in the digestion and absorption of food. Explanation, and hence understanding, comes to us year by year of the "why" and "what" of ourselves.

It is only within recent years that we have obtained even a partial understanding of the role of the so-called endocrine glands. These structures do not produce an external secretion as do the glands that pour saliva into the mouth. Nevertheless they are secreting glands and the chemical products that they manufacture are absorbed directly into the blood and are carried to all parts of the body. They are therefore referred to as glands of internal secretion and their products are called hormones or autocoids. These autocoids affect many functions of the body as positively as sunlight affects a photographic plate. Furthermore, they control and regulate certain body activities as the governor of an engine determines the amount of steam admitted to the cylinder.

Scientific research has supplied us with many of the secretions of these important structures extracted from the glands themselves and, in some instances, the extracts produce the same effect as though the glands were in active operation within the body. We are frequently amazed at the powerful effects produced by extremely minute amounts of these endrocine hormones.

For a better understanding of processes constantly occurring within the human laboratory we may briefly consider the functions of a few of these important gland structures.

Parathyroid glands: Four of these small glands are located on the back of the thyroid gland proper. Each is about the size of a common garden pea. Because of the necessary removal of the thyroid gland in the disease known as toxic goiter the skilful surgeon makes certain that the parathyroids are not removed or damaged. If perchance they are accidentally removed the individual exhibits symptoms of marked excitability and uncontrollable muscular contractions, sometimes simulating epilepsy. There is a gradual decline in the amount of calcium in the blood and the symptoms appear to be due to loss of this substance in the circulation.

Careful studies have shown that the parathyroids regulate the calcium-phosphorus balance in the body and hence play an important part in the growth of bone. Individuals deficient in parathyroid secretion can be restored to normal only by the administration of an extract known as parathormone, prepared from the parathyroid glands.

Occasionally tumor growths increase the secretion of the parathyroids. In such a situation deforming disease of the bones ensues. Cases have been reported in which tumors involving the parathyroid glands have been removed with marked improvement in the associated crippling bone disease. Overactivity of these glands causes the bones to surrender large amounts of calcium.

A close association apparently exists between the parathyroids and the adrenals in maintaining the normal calcium level in the body. With the normal functioning of both sets of glands—the adrenals and the parathyroids—there is a normal calcium balance. While the parathyroid secretion may take calcium out of the bones, the adrenal secretion may put it back.

What Today Means

"Sagittarius."

IF DECEMBER 11 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 12:30 to 230 p. m. and from 8:30 to 10:30 p. m.

On this December 11 look out that errors in judgment are not caused by too hasty reading of a letter or document. Speed is a danger that requires guarding against, as it might result in serious mishaps occurring where negligence is permitted. The majority of business deals negotiated will very likely be profitable, where conservative and ethical trading methods are used.

Cordiality will make social gatherings enjoyable due to its removing the restraint so frequently felt from an excessive amount of formality, if the host and hostess are dominated entirely by the spirit of sociability and not by some ulterior business motive. Some lucky circumstances may help make this a very happy day for you. Married and engaged couples, as well as those indulging in love affairs, will be wise to regulate their tone of voice so inflections can not be misconstrued as quarrelsome or complaining.

If a woman and December 11 is your natal day, there is a strong possibility you will receive an unexpected amount of gratifying attention on this date. Money matters of a decidedly agreeable nature may prove an influencing factor very shortly in some of your plans. It might be good judgment to make it a rule if you can not say something kind or nice about a person to say nothing, as unkind remarks are the ones likely to be repeated. Work in an exclusive shop, specializing in things with a feminine appeal, writing, and interior decorating, may offer money making possibilities. Love is essential for your complete happiness, so matrimony should be the logical thing for you.

The child born on December 11, when capable of understanding, should be discouraged in evincing strong likes and dislikes, especially where food and clothing are concerned. Instinctively of a fastidious nature, this youngster must not be allowed to let this trait dominate its actions.

If a man and December 11 is your birthday, the one thing you may have to guard against, which might interfere with your popularity, is evidencing a disposition of being rather hard to please in little things. Overcome this one weakness and your many fine attributes will carry you far on the road to success. The legal and medical professions, civil and mechanical engineering, as well as industrial lines, have openings for a man of your ability.

Successful people born on December 11:

Gerrit Smith, composer.
Henry Morton, scientist.
Benjamin S. Lyman, geologist.
Sarah H. Palfrey (E. Foxton), author.
Hiram Paulding, naval officer.
Samuel E. Sewall, jurist.

Napoleon Collection Sold At Auction in New York

Autographs and portraits of Napoleon and his marshals were bought for $375 at a recent auction in New York. The collection consisted of 44 letters and documents and 202 portraits. At the same sale a copy of the first edition of John Taylor's "Monsieur Tonson" brought $350. The work was illustrated by Robert Cruikshank.

Maids Leave Homes to Go Into Industry

Maids are leaving homes in New York in such numbers that there is a dearth of domestics for the first time in several years. Most of the girls are leaving their jobs because they prefer work in industry to the "inferior employment" called housework, according to a report made recently by a committee of domestic employment experts.

Some of the reasons given by maids for resigning were: Forbidden to use bathtub, ordered to brush dogs' teeth, could not use telephone, could not entertain boy friends, had too much work and too little to eat.

One girl declared her employer forced her to press satin underwear manufactured in the home for a retail shop.

The committee advised mistresses who want to keep good maids to pay them decent wages, give them a place in the social scale equal to that of factory workers, and see that they have security, variety, friendliness and respect.

Magazine Lists Gifts of Toys For Children

Writer Divides Them Into Instructive, Exercise, Amusement Groups.

A CHILD is curious about the adult world and learns from playing with toys designed to meet the challenge of sophisticated children born in this engineering era. A writer in the current issue of the Parents' Magazine claims that this insistence upon realism is the reason why a miniature streamline train actually runs so many feet per second; a baby doll drinks milk from a bottle; why there's a real battery headlight on the cheapest iron motorcycle and a genuine long-wave and short-wave radio set in the complete doll's house. This realism has a great educational value.

The article divides all toys into the three following groups. The purpose they serve in the child's development should be the key to their selection.

Unconscious Education.

(1) Instructive toys expose a child to unconscious education while he is engrossed in play. In this class is the educational material, correlating the work of school and home, as a travel book or Wild West cut-out.

(2) Physical training toys tempt the child to exercise large muscle masses, thereby gaining coordination and poise. Ball, jumping rope, bicycle, gymnasium apparatus and athletic outfit are numbered in this group.

(3) Amusement toys appeal to the normal instinct for fun and nonsense. A trick box, comical transfer pictures, balloons—these have nothing to recommend them except entertainment value, but they are necessary.

Gift List Prepared.

The magazine has prepared a list of toys arranged according to age groups from over 8 or under 18. If you are in doubt what to give your boy or girl for Christmas, you may find the list helpful.

For boys 8 to 12: Tool box, workbench 28 inches high with 2 vises, junior baseball outfit, construction set with electrical gadgets, boats, puzzles and magic tricks.

For girls 8 to 12: Dolls and doll accessories, housekeeping sets: laundry, dining, cooking, hand sewing machine, bead and wool looms, sand glass for timing activities and costumes for theatricals.

For boys and girls from 8 to 12: Table tennis, marionette theater, junior photo set, nature study sets: aquarium, insect breeding cage, collections, material for handicraft, stamp book and accessories.

Birds' Affection Killed by Greed; Fittest Survive

Affection as humans know it, is almost completely lacking in birds, Dr. Herbert Friedman, of the Smithsonian Institution, has discovered. It is the ones who make the most noise and can push themselves to the front that get fed first—and sometimes last also.

The proud display of plumage of the male bird, his struttings and posturings at courting time, are to impress other males and not females, according to Dr. Friedman. He has reached this conclusion by observing male birds go through the so-called courting antics when there was not a female bird in sight. And if there is a female nearby she is usually so busy feeding herself she pays scant attention to his goings-on. The male bird's antics are to show off his strength to other males, Dr. Friedman is convinced.

Keeping Fat From Smoking Is a Problem

By Dorothea Duncan.

THIS QUESTION of how to keep fat from smoking when it is used for deep frying is a problem of many housewives. One thing is certain—fat that is allowed to heat to the point where it begins to smoke is burning. The fat then begins to form properties that are difficult to digest, and the food cooked in it will not be as attractive and will have an unpleasant taste. The burning fat will smoke up the kitchen and the odor will penetrate throughout the house and leave an unpleasant clinging odor, long after the cooking has been finished and the meal served.

First of all be sure that you have an appropriate kettle for deep fat frying. One of iron or heavy aluminum will prove most satisfactory. A cooking thermometer is a positive way to test the temperature of the fat. It may be hung on the inside of the kettle, and when the desired temperature for frying is acquired, the heat may be regulated to keep the fat at this temperature.

If you have no thermometer, try the fat occasionally by dropping in a small cube of day-old bread. Remember that a fat is the correct temperature for frying cooked mixtures if the bread becomes a golden brown in 40 seconds, and for an uncooked mixture if the bread browns in 60 seconds. Try the fat often during the cooking to insure the right temperature, and the fat will not have a chance to become too hot and smoke.

Questions Are Answered.

The following questions have been submitted:

When using flour instead of cornstarch, what amount is used of the former?

Cornstarch has a greater thickening power than flour, so if flour is to be substituted the quantity must be greater than the amount of cornstarch. For example, if a recipe calls for one teaspoon of cornstarch, it would require one tablespoon of flour to give the required thickening power. This is the proportion used in the average recipe.

What sort of a salad should I serve with a sauerkraut dinner?

A fruit salad, jellied or plain, served with a cream mayonnaise will provide an interesting contrast for the rest of the dinner. A baked or cooked pudding or custard will round out the menu and provide milk, which may otherwise be left out of a menu of this type.

Is there any outstanding difference in a white cake if it is made with lard instead of butter?

Butter is usually regarded as the most desirable shortening because of its flavor. However, lard may be substituted in a white cake, and the result will be a whiter cake. Enough salt must be added to the cake if lard is used to take the place of the salt in the butter. The cake will lack many of the food properties that are contained in the butter, if lard is substituted. The actual cake will be the same in appearance and, if properly flavored, will be a very satisfactory product from the standpoint of flavor and texture.

Baked Lima Bean Loaf.

2 cups lima beans
1 cup dry bread crumbs
4 tablespoons peanut butter
½ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon poultry seasoning
2 tablespoons grated onion
1 tablespoon bacon fat
1 cup milk (more if needed)

Wash and soak the beans overnight then cook in boiling water until soft (about 45 minutes). Drain, cool, then chop coarsely. Add crumbs mixed with peanut butter and seasoning, then fat and milk to moisten. Put into a greased bread pan and bake in a moderate oven (350 to 400 degrees F.) 30 minutes. Serve with brown sauce, white sauce or tomato sauce.

Northern Johnny Cake.

2 cups corn meal
2 cups sour milk
2 tablespoons shortening
2 tablespoons sugar, white or brown
1½ teaspoons salt
2 eggs
1 teaspoon soda
1 tablespoon cold water

Cook together the meal, milk, shortening, sugar and salt in a double boiler for about 20 minutes Allow the mixture to cool, then add the well-beaten eggs and the soda dissolved in the water. Bake in a shallow iron or granite pan for about 30 minutes at 400 degrees F.

In case there is not time to cook and cool the meal the following method of mixing may be used: Mix and sift together the meal, sugar, salt and soda and the sour milk gradually, then the well-beaten eggs and the melted fat. Bread made by this method does not have as good a texture as when made by the first method.

Doctor Fixes Broken Head for 50 Cents

It cost only $3 to have a broken head mended in London 250 years ago. This is proved by the bill of an English surgeon, found recently in an old English newspaper.

The bill ran as follows, according to the New York State Journal of Medicine:

T. Edgsaw a Coachman sore wounded on the head; the Cranium bare, the breadth of Crown piece fell into my hand—Charges, Melrosarium, 2 shillings and 6 pence; Spirit of Wine, 3 shillings; Brandy, 1 shilling; Plaster, 1 shilling and 6 pence; tove (probably tow) to dress, 6 pence; fomentation, 2 shillings; for own paines, nothing; for my servants, 2 shillings; total, 12 shillings and 6 pence (or $3). Received the Same in this Bill by mee, Thos. Wotton.

SHY CINDERELLA

By WILSON COLLISON.

Lillian and Anne are chorus girls, who have exhausted their funds and have no prospect of jobs. The story has only just begun and you can pick it up from this point today.

ANNE awakened, next morning, when the alarm clock went off with its startling clatter. She sat straight up in bed, at first sleepily frightened and a little astonished. She sat that way for a long time with one hand to her head staring across the room toward the dresser where the disturber was.

The room was quite dark and cold; a clammy, chilling sort of coldness that made Anne shiver a little. She wanted very much to duck back under the covers and go to sleep; she had spent a restless night and felt weary with a nervous fatigue that seemed to make her bones ache. Still, she'd be all right after she got out of bed.

She slid from under the covers and placed her bare feet upon the rug. The rug seemed icy. She hastily found her slippers and shoved her very small feet into them.

Alarm Rang Again.

She turned and looked at Lillian. She could barely discern Lillian's face in the darkness. Lillian had evidently not stirred with the clatter of the alarm clock; and the alarm clock must have grown tired and run down, for it had suddenly ceased its sound.

Presently the alarm clock began to clatter again in a half-hearted manner. Anne went across and shut it off. She stood looking at the bed. Lillian had turned over; it seemed to Anne that one of Lillian's eyes was open.

One of Lillian's eyes was open, and Lillian said in a strangled kind of voice, "Throw that thing out the window and come back to bed!"

Lillian promptly turned over then and went back to sleep. Anne fastened a newspaper over the electric bulb which hung from the wire over the dresser, so that the light would not shine into Lillian's face. Lillian's disposition was sometimes really very bad in the morning.

A Strange Advertisement.

In the glow of light Anne stood looking at the want ad section of the Times. Last night she had marked off another batch of prospects. There was one in particular around which she had drawn a heavy circle with a lead pencil. Gazing at this ad she became for a moment cheerful, then oddly depressed and dismayed. It was something she had never before tried. Lillian would go into hysterics if she knew about it.

Anne leaned her elbows upon the edge of the dresser and stared down at the ad. At first it sounded a bit absurd, but when she'd read it over several times, it sounded quite straightforward and businesslike.

"Wanted: By young business man, mother and daughter to take charge of Long Island home. Cook and maid. Homemakers, not servants, desired. Applications by mail only. Address suite 1028, 115 Park avenue."

Anne turned slowly and gazed at the bed. She gazed at it for a long time in silence. There was a troubled expression in her eyes; her mouth was drawn down at the corners. She was thinking and her thoughts seemed to harass her.

Lillian was snoring. The room was growing a bit lighter. Anne could see Lillian's blonde hair tumbled about her face.

Anne put on her dressing-robe and tiptoed across the room to the door. She went through the hall which was dark and still.

There was no one in the bath room.

Lillian awakened long after Anne had gone. She awakened with a dull headache and the disquieting feeling that the world was about to come to an end and drown all her sorrows. She sat up and stared at the wall and thought a little bitterly that she would probably find a bit of contentment in heaven if she ever got that far.

A Sad Come-down.

She glanced at the place in the bed beside her where Anne ought to be. She looked across at the dresser and saw some newspapers scattered over it; she saw the paper fastened around the electric light. She thought, "The poor kid's gone out to look for a job again. She'll come in tonight all down in a heap."

Lillian slid out of bed with a yawn and a muffled groan. She got up and wandered aimlessly around the room in her faded pajamas; she went to the window and tried to put up the shade; it stuck and in a sudden fury Lillian tore it off the roller. She hurled the tattered shade to the floor and stood staring out the grimy window into the court. From somewhere timid sunlight was valiantly trying to filter into the court across the top of the building. Lillian thought with a frown, "Look at me now, standing in washed-out pajamas when I used to be in Atlantic City for week-ends."

She went to the dresser and gazed at herself in the clouded mirror. She thought that she looked pale; there were circles under her eyes. She thought, "In another year I'll have to put peroxide on my hair or they'll be calling me grandma."

She stood before the mirror for a long time in a kind of bitter silence. After she had finished surveying her face and counting the lines, she went back to the bed and looked under the pillow for her package of cigarettes. Then she suddenly remembered that she had forgotten to buy cigarettes last night. She sat down upon the edge of the bed and held her face in her hands and stared at the floor. She thought, "I've got to get some money some place today. The room rent isn't paid and it would be tough if we got tossed into the street with all our last year's clothes."

She got up and walked across to the dresser again. She opened a drawer and rummaged among some handkerchiefs and empty perfume bottles. She finally found an aspirin tin and opened it. The tin was empty. Lillian said aloud, "They're all after me this morning. No cigarettes, no aspirin. I wonder if there's an egg left."

She squeezed into the closet that served as a kitchenette. On a shelf she found the egg carton. She opened the carton. There were two bright, fresh eggs. She smiled.

She broke the eggs in a skillet and lighted the gas. Before the eggs were fried she was almost asphyxiated, but once the eggs came out of the skillet, on to a plate, she fled from the gas fumes in the kitchenette to the fresher air of the bedroom. She sat upon the edge of the bed and ate the eggs with the feeling that these might be the last two eggs to enter her stomach for days.

She got her handbag and took from it a small notebook. She went carefully through a list of names and telephone numbers. What she needed was money. She said aloud, "Money, money, money."

But none of the names suggested money to her. She had quite thoroughly worked them all the past few weeks. Her credit had run out. There was Eddie Slosher up in the Palace Theater Building. Was it too soon to try Eddie again? Eddie had said when he had loaned her the last $10, "Listen, Lillian, I like you and you're a good kid, but don't you know 50 chorus girls a day come in here and try to touch me for anything from one buck to 80 for railroad fare back to the old home town?"

No Help There.

Yes, Lillian knew all that. She had been in the game a long time; she had seen good years and lean ones; but this had been the worst year she had ever passed through. Just a week ago she had met Sol Berg on the corner of Broadway and Forty-second street. Sol had once been nice to her; Sol had once flourished in a smart East Side apartment and had ridden in an imported car. But Sol had looked very gloomy last week on the corner of Broadway and Forty-second street. He had said with a very crooked smile, "I ain't got a dime, Lillian. With U. S. Steel at 28, how do I buy the baby shoes? Listen, if we don't get light wines and beer this year, this country is going to the dogs. No foolin'. Honest, Lillian, I can't help you. Can't you get in a show?"

Couldn't she get in a show? Lillian tossed the notebook upon the bed and began to walk about the room again in her faded pajamas. She thought bitterly, "These financial worries are getting me goofy. I ought to have got a job broadcasting when radio first came in."

Something on the dresser suddenly caught her eye. She stopped and stared at it. It was a sheet of white paper pinned to something which seemed to be holding up the sheet of white paper. She went to the dresser and took up the sheet. It was pinned to a package which had three cigarettes in it. On the sheet of paper was written in a fine, delicate hand:

"These are for you. There aren't any more in the house. I'm off to see about a job. Don't worry. This is my lucky day. I feel it. You stay in bed and rest today. I'll have good news for you when I come in. Anne."

Lillian found a match and lighted a cigarette. She dabbled at one eye with her hand; some tobacco from the end of the cigarette got into the eye and she swore. She kept the one eye closed for a minute and stared into the mirror with the other eye. She thought, "The poor kid. Always thinking of me. Why, it's a shame that we can't get going. She's the prettiest thing in this town."

Mild Winter Forecast By Ferryboat Skippers

We're going to have a mild winter. This prophecy comes from veteran skippers of Hudson River ferryboats. The absence of ducks on the river is one reason given. The other is the fact that the wind was northeast when the sun crossed the autumn equinox. When ducks stay away from the river they are getting plenty of food inland, which means the weather is comparatively mild, the ferryboaters say.

Women Urged To Adopt New Color Habits

London Designer Offers Formula for Dressing Distinctively.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10 (AP).—Throw out all your old notions of color combination, except black and white, and start over again, Victor Stiebel, London designer, advises women who wish to dress distinctively.

"Women have used certain color combinations year after year until they are so trite now that no one looks at them twice," he declared.

"New color unions, if they are right, can make all the difference between a banal outfit and a truly chic one.

"Everyone is tired of seeing the same old contrasts played up each season. If it's a brown dress, they add yellow accessories, or tan, or pink. If it's black they trim it with red.

"Any tyro in color effects can get more effective combinations than these. Specifically, there are all the colors in an artist's palette to work with."

All-Black Costume Praised.

The young English designer, couturier to some of London's smartest dressed women, is here in an attempt to revolutionize the color habits of American women. The all-black costume won his highest praise.

"An all-black costume is always good," he said. "If a woman is chic enough, she can wear it. Other women will add white touches to the black."

To replace the color combinations which he considers worn out, Stiebel suggested pale blue and a dark gray-green; royal blue and scarlet; a dirty pink and a mushroom brown. For a threesome, he prefers brown with accents of gray and peacock blue.

Caramel-cream with deep magenta or cyclamen, he also termed "a refreshing new combination."

Grays and Browns for Brunettes.

"The ancient idea of scarlet and purple on a dark-haired woman is wrong, artistically," he explained. "We've gone a long way beyond that, if we're sophisticated at all.

"There are certain reds, the cherry colors, which are marvelous for blondes. And many dark women can be very smart looking in colors not originally meant for them. Grays and browns, for example, are most becoming to dark women.

"A blonde woman who wants to be distinctive might try shades of dusty yellow and dusty dark blues.

"I like red heads when they wear dusty pinks and biscuit colors rather than the obvious greens which redheads have worn since time began."

Sportswomen Try Curling

Winter Game Played With Broom Is Again in Vogue.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

SOPHISTICATED sportswomen today still use old-fashioned brooms. It's not a matter of to vacuum or not to vacuum the drawing room rug, but the use of a regular broom on the curling rink.

Curling has been rapidly drawing cold weather sportswomen in recent seasons, and already this year practice has begun in Boston, on indoor rinks in Connecticut, and in Canada. New York sportswomen and women's curling teams from Lake Placid, Saranac and Brookline, Mass., make faithful pilgrimages to Canada, a hotbed—or perhaps we should say a refrigerator of the sport.

A women's bonspiel is held annually at the Seigniory Club near Montreal, and the description of the last one gives a surprising picture of the sport: "Smartly dressed women, waging peculiar warfare, hurling huge blocks of iron at each other. Each trying to shout the other down with a cry like 'soup, soup.' Women clutching brooms frantically sweeping the length of a long sheet of ice."

In the progress of a game, played four on a side, a stone is played from the "hack," that portion of ice on which a player crouches as she launches her stone with an easy backward-forward swing. The stone spirals as it goes down the long, narrow sheet of ice, curving in toward the center of the ice sheet as it approaches its destination, known as the tee, the point about which three rings, two feet apart, are traced usually in blue ink upon the ice.

The sweeping, which was first necessary in out-of-door play to keep the ice clear of snow, is now a very important procedure. Veteran curlers agree that sweeping, even on indoor artificial ice, creates a vacuum which very definitely helps the stone in the way it should go.

Curling in Scotland in the old days, when it was exalted as a manly exercise, was played with channel stones of somewhat vague shapes and sizes worn smooth by the waves and friction of the winds. The early curlers simply bored a hole in the rock for a grip and let it go at that. As the game developed, however, players devised a handle and the stones were made more uniform.

Gen. Wolfe's Highlanders, who won fame in the capture of Quebec City, are said to have melted old cannon to make their curling stones. This was the origin of the irons curling game in North America.

Women's curling in the city of Montreal dates back to 1879, when the young Princess Louise, accompanying her husband, the Marquis of Lorne, Governor-General of Canada, to the city, curled on an outdoor rink in the garden of a friend, using a small round of wood with a stick stuck in the center for a handle. Today Montreal has 300 women players.

The sport of curling, once regarded as a man's pursuit, is being invaded by women. Miss Katherine B. Hamlin, of Boston, is shown above taking her turn on the ice. Miss Hamlin is known as a sculptress as well as a sportswoman.

Child Chats

Parents Should Not Be Shocked by Children's Romances.

By Alice Fox Pitts.

THE INTENSE love notes that a boy and girl 6 or 8 years old often exchange shock some parents and amuse others.

There's no need of being shocked. They will pass through this phase and a few years later they will be man haters and woman haters for a period.

If you are amused, don't let them know it. It's a serious matter with them and if you laugh, you will be shut out from further confidences. When they reach adolescence and find romance again, this is even more important, for they are shy about their affairs of the heart, always fearful of being scolded or teased.

One way of inducing their confidences is to recall your own youth and regale them with stories of the boy who exhibited interest in you in school, but refuse to come to the house for fear your father would open the door; or the time you bribed your little sister with a dime to keep away from you and your current flame at the Sunday school picnic. You seem so grown up to your children, so settled and sober, that it is hard for them to realize that you, too, went through the throes of youthful love.

Sympathetic handling will help to induce them to open their hearts to you; and you can guide them as you want to do, only if you have their confidence.

Thursday: The Squirming Child.

Old Question Of Prodigies Debated Anew

THE OLD debate over whether a precocious child develops into a successful grown-up has flared again with the reputed discovery of an intelligence quotient of 230 in a Brooklyn boy aged 7½ years.

Dr. Irving K. Lorge, of Teachers College, Columbia University, while calling the tale of the child prodigy "very doubtful" maintains that intelligence quotients in children are an indication of adult accomplishment. He cited an experiment made by one of his associates, Prof. Leta S. Hollingsworth.

"Fifteen years ago," he said, "she selected 25 children, who on the basis of their intelligence quotients were among the brightest children in the country. We have kept in close touch with these children and up to the present time 24 of them have fulfilled their youthful promise."

Prof. Rodolph Yintner, of the department of psychology at Teachers College, pointed out that intelligence tests measured only abstract intelligence.

"They do not consider such things as concrete intelligence or personality factors. A person may have a high degree of abstract intelligence and still not be very successful in later life. A person who is brilliant as a child will remain brilliant for the rest of his life. But knowledge of his brilliance might give him an overwhelming sense of his own superiority and cause him to develop personality defects that would hinder him."

Dr. Walter E. Hager, expert on vocational guidance at Teachers College, pointed out that intelligence tests did not measure patience, perseverence, determination, personality, health and other factors that help determine a person's success in later life.

Collecting Early American Dolls Is the Hobby of Mrs. A. E. Heiss

Three of Mrs. A. E. Heiss' dolls pose for portraits. The bridal dress is an exact copy of one in a New York museum; the central doll, with the slim waist and broad shoulders, is gowned a la Godey's Ladies Book.

Sews Clothes for Them Conforming to Time They Were Made.

Each country, each age has its peculiar type of doll. So, from the great selection of the world and its history, a woman gathered the dolls that were new when America was young. Her story is told in the following article, one of a series on dolls.

By Katherine Smith.

A CHINA HEAD, black painted hair, rosy lips and cheeks; a tiny body tapering into dainty feet, and an outfit as smart as any Godey belle could wish—this is one of Mrs. A. E. Heiss' dolls.

Mrs. Heiss has been collecting early American dolls for many years and from many States. She determines the period in which they were made and dresses them accordingly. Every detail is correct, for Mrs. Heiss is a dressmaker extraordinary, a tireless researcher and a devotee of old dolls.

"I suppose there are few antique dealers in the country that don't have my name on file," she says, "but old dolls are hard to get. I brought one back from Salem recently. A lovely thing, but the body is in bad condition. I usually destroy the old bodies, for sanitary reasons, and make new ones myself.

Old Materials Used.

"As nearly as possible, I try to use old materials for the clothes. The bride, for instance, is dressed in a bit of old wedding satin—a tiny scrap I picked up. I used every sixteenth inch of it; her skirt isn't quite wide enough, but she's quite accurate otherwise. I copied her dress from a photograph of a dress in a New York museum. The style is Empire, 1812."

The dress is perfection in detail. The tiny puffed sleeves, the two-strand pearl necklace, the pearl trimmings at neckline and skirt—all are exactly like the picture. And as far as underclothing is concerned, the bride wears a lace trimmed petticoat, ruffled pantaletes, silk stockings and white laced slippers. Her bouquet is of ribbon flowers, also made by Mrs. Heiss.

The Godey lady, Mrs. Heiss believes, is one of the oldest dolls she has. Most of such dolls are between 85 and 100 years old. This one's mulberry taffeta dress and underclothing are made with the same precision of detail, the same exquisite workmanship as the garments of the bride.

"My Quaker is another old one," said Mrs. Heiss. "Look, she has wooden hands. And, please notice, she has no lace on her petticoat." The Quaker lady wears tiny black leather shoes, trimmed with silver buckles, also made by Mrs. Heiss.

Many Irregularities.

"I like to imagine," said Mrs. Heiss, "that an old-time mother said, 'I'd like to fix up this doll, but she needs a hand.' The father, overhearing the remark, went to the wood shed, and whittled a hand out of a chip. Then some youngster was probably delighted.

"There are many irregularities in the dolls. It is seldom—if ever—that I find one that is entirely of one period. Usually the head is older than the body, the hands and feet don't match, and so on. As parts broke or were damaged, substitutions were made, with the result that almost all old dolls are composites."

Mrs. Heiss dresses dolls for her friends as well as for her own collection. "I like to give people something nice and a bit different," she said. "So, if a friend has an old doll, I dress her up, perhaps, like one of the old-fashioned President's wives, copying her costume from the original.

Copied Outfit From Portrait.

"Here's one of Martha Washington's dresses." She held up a doll, dressed in green and peach brocade. "This material was a bit of a train. I got it from a man who said it had come from the old British embassy. It might have been worn by the ambassador's wife, because it was cut like an old-fashioned train and looked as if it had been removed from a dress.

"Bits of hand-made lace come out of my own lace bag. However, I can get some very good imitations at department stores in town." Her eyes twinkled.

"The first doll I dressed was my own. I copied her outfit from a portrait of a relative of mine. That was years ago, and I've become more and more interested. Like any other hobby, the more you learn about dolls, the more fascinating it gets. Then, too, I like to do needlework, and making these dresses gives me something to do, and in a sense makes the dolls more valuable to me, because of the work I put into them.

"It's not a new hobby. Many a royal lady dressed her collection of dolls. Queen Victoria had a beautiful array. They weren't considered a childish plaything in earlier times—gentlemen would present their lady-loves with beautiful dolls as tokens of their esteem.

"Another thing about my dolls, they're all so different. I think their faces are really very lovely—they're all hand-painted and well done."

Clothes Made Properly.

Aside from the three dolls pictured, Mrs. Heiss has another bride in a cream satin dress with a bustle, and fine pleating around the skirt and train. Another blonde lady wears a black velvet dress, with a hoop-skirt, puffed sleeves and a real lace collar.

"And best of all, you can dress and undress them, for their clothes are made properly in that respect, too," Mrs. Heiss said.

Coach Ranks Sports With Book Learning

Stevens Declares Football Makes Fine Citizens.

Athletics are as important as book learning to college students, in the opinion of Dr. Mal Stevens, head football coach at New York University.

Dr. Stevens debated a recent statement of Dr. James Rowland Angel, resident of Yale, that institutions in putting athletics above education were being traitors to their trust.

Football makes fine citizens, the coach explained, because it is a rough individual game with generous subordination for the welfare of a group. The game is also fine for spectators, he declared, as it lets off a lot of emotional steam.

"If we didn't have such a safety valve we might turn to bolshevism, communism or some other form of social unrest. We will continue to have great football crowds and as much interest in football as in education," Dr. Stevens said.

Scotland's Women, Like Poet's Brook, Babble on Forever

Women evidently go on forever in Scotland. Deaths of 13 centenarians were registered in that country last year. All 13 were women. Since 1910 there have been 331 deaths of centenarians recorded in Scotland. Fifty-one were men, while 180 were women.

For the last 24 years there has been an attempt to verify the ages of those who claimed to be more than 100 years old. Of the 13 who died last year, only 5 had their ages verified. Two were 100, two 101 and one was 103.

Drama's Trend From Sirens To Heroines of Literature Affords a Pleasant Change

By Malvina Lindsay
(Woman's Page Editor).

EMILY DICKINSON, the spinster-recluse, considered by some America's greatest woman poet, has become the subject of another play, which recently opened in New York. Meantime, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, reincarnated on the screen, continues to pack in the crowds at movie theaters. And nearly every season is good for a book or a play about the Bronte sisters.

• • • •

It is a pleasant change to have these literary ladies, instead of the traditional sirens of history, reliving their great moments publicly. For centuries the world, particularly the feminine part of it, has concerned itself with the emotions and carryings-on of Cleopatra, Ninon de L'Enclos, Du Barry, Pompadour and others whose glamour depended largely on their lack of inhibitions.

• • • •

Cleopatra, who had either the courage or the greed—whichever way you want to look at it—to follow ruthlessly her own desires, has long been a favorite topic of playwrights and biographers. But no literary interpreter has bothered to probe the soul of Octavia, Mark Anthony's wife, who after her husband's fatal episode with the Siren of the Nile, settled down to the prosaic task of rearing his and Cleopatra's children.

THIS SITUATION might indicate that only sin had dramatic possibilities. Yet who could have been more outwardly conventional than Emily Dickinson, who retired for life into the solitude of her garden because the man she loved was married to another.

• • • •

Certainly Elizabeth Barrett did nothing more scandalous than to escape from an impossible parental tyranny by means of an elopement. And while Charlotte and Emily Bronte were reputed to have fallen in love simultaneously with a married schoolmaster, both managed to stifle their predatory instincts. In fact, Charlotte wound up by marrying a highly proper curate, who held that woman's place was not at the writing desk.

• • • •

It is true that the love stories of Emily Dickinson and Elizabeth Barrett have enveloped both in a romantic haze and that the weird, isolated lives of the Brontes have presented an irresistible lure to literary investigators. But these things alone would not explain the vital personal hold these frail women of letters have taken on the world's imagination.

EDITH WHARTON has pointed out that adventure as portrayed in literature is shifting from the body to the soul. At one time the traveller who would could spin the most exciting yarn was the one who had wandered the farthest, fought the hardest and loved the most widely. But today such persons usually turn out to be boresome windjammers from whom everyone flees. The world demands not quantity but quality in emotion and experience.

• • • •

The woman who has lived the most sensitively, the most intensely, the most dramatically is not likely to be the obvious charmer with an exotic perfume and a seductive eye. She is not likely to be a self-confessed tragedienne who thinks she alone among women has "known life." She is more apt to be someone who like Emily Dickinson has hugged her deepest experiences to her heart and has refused to make a Lady Godiva of her soul.

• • • •

In their day, no doubt, the Bronte sisters, Elizabeth Barrett and Emily Dickinson, were regarded by amateur Cleopatras as drab, repressed old maids. But because these women intensified their emotional experiences by lifting them into the realm of the spirit, they have projected their personalities down the years. They will continue to live not only by their literary creations but by the subtle poignant dramas of their lives.

'Be Personal,' New Gift Idea

NEW YORK, Dec. 10 (AP).—"Be personal" is the slogan for this year's Christmas giving.

With stacks of new and amusing gadgets in the shops, it's going to be "the thing" to match gifts to personalities, and find something which will fit the stocking for which it's meant.

For the "woman who has everything" there are a number of inexpensive tricks which may please her more than more costly gifts: A tiny china hand whose fingers may hold her rings when she steps into her bath, a record of a good choir singing Christmas carols, monogrammed paper napkins for her country house, or a scrambled egg puzzle whose trick consists in putting the egg back together again.

Even her perfume steps out in new containers this season. Miniature glass crowns, midget skyscraper towers and mirrored boxes hold the alluring scents now instead of the classic flacon. Vanity cases, too, are out in new guises—square chromium designs which simulate platinum, set with imitation rubbies and diamonds, thin compact tortoise shells and new roller-top silver designs.

U. S., Kentucky Threaten Entry In Mine Dispute

Sheriff of Harlan County Told to 'Clean Up' Force of Deputies.

Frankfort, Ky., Dec. 10 (AP).—Threats of Federal and State intercession in the dispute between capital and organized labor in southeastern Kentucky coal fields came today after Adjt. Gen. Henry H. Denhardt, of the Kentucky National Guard, took to Gov. Ruby Laffoon a report criticizing the activities of deputy sheriffs in the employ of Harlan County coal operators.

Gen. Denhardt, returning from a conference with coal operators and officials at Harlan, recommended that Sheriff Theodore R. Middleton be ordered to "clean up" his force of deputies or face removal from office. Troops assigned to active duty at Harlan Saturday night after a group of organizers of the United Mine Workers of America were reported "hemmed in" by deputy sheriffs at a Harlan hotel with bands of armed men bound for Harlan to "rescue" them were disbanded by Gen. Denhardt yesterday when a truce apparently was effected.

A statement that a Congressional investigation of conditions in Harlan coal fields was likely unless conditions improve by January was made today by Representative A. J. May (Democrat).

William Turnblazer, of Jellico, Tenn., president of District 19, U. M. W. A., who was in the group of union organizers escorted from Harlan yesterday by troops, reiterated "Harlan County will be organized" and "we are not quitting."

Reporting on conditions in Harlan County where efforts to unionize the coal fields was climaxed in the spring of 1931 by the "battle of Evarts" in which five men were slain, Gen. Denhardt said he was convinced that the principal trouble was caused by "the character" of some of Harlan County's 100 deputy sheriffs. He said he was told by Circuit Judge James M. Gilbert and County Attorney Elmon Middleton that five men were convicted of homicide while serving as deputies.

In the Harlan conference, coal operators who have large sums invested in the southeastern Kentucky field said the only remedy was to bar "outside organizers." The workers, they said, were contented and were not demanding organization. The union, they charged, was influenced by northern operators who were willing to have the Harlan field closed by strikes.

In the not far distant past the accepted way to determine if a person was dead or alive was to listen for heartbeats. If none could be detected the person was assumed to be dead. This method has since been discarded in cases where there is any doubt, and more scientific means are employed in determining if life still persists.

In the case of Ann Carter Lee, wife of Gen. Henry "Light Horse Harry" Lee, four physicians pronounced her dead after an illness she suffered in the fall of 1805. Her heartbeats could not be detected. Her body was placed in a coffin, the funeral was held, and the "remains" were put in the family vault. Fortunately embalming was not a common practice then, and was not used in her case.

A week later when the sexton entered the Lee mausoleum at Stratford, Va., to put fresh flowers on the casket he heard her cry for help. She was soon revived and regained her health—enough so that in January of 1807, 15 months later, she gave birth to a baby boy. This boy grew up to be Gen. Robert E. Lee, the commander-in-chief of the armies of the Confederacy during the Civil War.

Strange as it seems, the albatross never seems to think about building a nest until after its egg is laid. Even then its nest is a crude affair, consisting almost solely of a ring of mud to keep the egg from rolling away.

Taxicab Inspection Limit January 1

All Cars Must Be Passed to Continue Operation.

Warning was issued by the Public Utilities Commission yesterday that there will be no extension of time for the inspection of taxicabs.

Under the law all cabs must be inspected and approved by the commission before January 1. Those which are not may not be operated.

There have been 1,143 cabs inspected and passed, James L. Martin, executive secretary of the commission, said. There are 3,472 taxicabs in the District. This leaves 2,329 which must pass inspection before the first of next year or get off the streets, Mr. Martin warned.

"There are 17 working days remaining before January 1," he said. "We have one inspector who can average 125 and 150 cabs per day. So far as the commission is concerned there is to be no extension of time for inspections."

Court Assails Indian's Widow In Fund Protest

Woman's Reply to Breaking of Trust Is Called 'Scandalous.'

Because of "impertinent and scandalous" matter appearing in it, an affidavit filed in the District Supreme Court by Anna Laura Barnett, widow of Jackson Barnett, known as the world's wealthiest Indian, was ordered stricken from the files by Justice F. Dickinson Letts yesterday.

The affidavit, filed in the case in which the Government successfully broke up a $250,000 trust which Barnett had established here for the ultimate benefit of his wife, referred to high officers of the Interior Department as "monsters," termed a former Representative an "ungrateful monster," described a prominent law firm here as a collection agency for lawyers involved in the litigation, and said that the judge who tried the case here would have reached a different decision had he been impartial.

The trust agreement was "thumb printed" by Barnett, who could neither read nor write. The trial here did not involve the validity of his marriage to Mrs. Barnett, though a California court had ruled it invalid. Barnett acquired all his millions through the discovery of oil on land given him by the Government.

At one time, it was shown here, he gave away $1,000,000 through agreements which he effectuated by his thumb print. The agreements all later were canceled by the courts.

Mother, 14, Wants Husband, Also 14, To Return Home

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 10 (AP).—Mrs. Pauline Mullins, 14-year-old mother, wants her 14-year-old husband to come back home.

The girl nursed her 3-week-old daughter at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Noah, today while she told reporters she wanted a reconciliation with Henry Bert Mullins, "if he will do right."

The boy husband was at liberty under $300 bond, charged with threatening to take the life of his father-in-law. He was arrested last Saturday.

"Henry Bert became angry when I came to see mother for a few hours," Mrs. Mullins recalled today. "He tried to take the baby away. My father grabbed him and they had an argument. Henry left the house."

Noah said he would like to "bury the hatchet as long as he doesn't come here raising sand again."

Bell Hearing In Poisoning Opens Today

Alleged Victim, Son and Daughter Defend Civic Leader.

Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—Widespread interest was being manifested tonight in the opening tomorrow of the trial of Edward C. Bell, Fredericksburg merchant, churchman and civic leader, on charges of poisoning and attempting to poison his invalid wife, Mrs. Madge Bell.

Because of the prominence of the Bell family, the case has attracted widespread interest since October, when he was arrested on the charges. But the case took on unusual interest today as persons closely connected with the Bell family were understood to have declared that Mrs. Bell's condition had taken a sudden turn for the worse.

Speculation was also rife as to the course which the defense counsel will pursue when the trial opens. Bell will be defended by C. O'Conor Goolrick, former State Senator and president of the Virginia Bar Association; W. W. Butzner, W. Marshall King and Alvin W. Embrey, jr. Bell pleaded not guilty to the indictments when arraigned October 21.

Family for Defendant.

Three members of the Bell family—Mrs. Bell, Miss Irma Bell and Edward Bell, jr.—have declared themselves as "definitely behind" the defendant. Miss Bell is said to be an unwilling witness for the Commonwealth. Whether the calling of Mrs. Bell to the witness stand is anticipated, could not be learned.

The case will be heard in corporation court before Judge Frederick W. Coleman. Albert V. Bryan, Commonwealth's attorney of Alexandria, will prosecute in the place of W. B. F. Cole, who withdrew from proceedings because of personal interests in the case.

Twenty witnesses will testify for the prosecution, while five have been called by the defense. Prosecution witnesses summoned are Mrs. Ella McMullin, Richmond; Miss Irma Bell, daughter of the defendant; W. B. F. Cole, Fredericksburg Commonwealth's attorney; Dr. John E. Cole, physician to Mrs. Bell; W. F. Bynum, Richmond automobile dealer; Joseph Donly, automobile salesman; Thomas A. Balthis, Richmond chemist; C. Braxton Valentine, Richmond meat packing inspector; Dr. Edwin Wood, University of Virginia; Thomas R. Boggs, Baltimore physician; J. Conway Chichester, Fredericksburg city sergeant; Woodrow Jones, former employe of Bell's furniture store; Dr. Charles P. Rector, pharmacist; Dr. W. L. Bond, pharmacist; Dr. Charles H. Lewis, pharmacist; Dr. H. C. James, pharmacist; Mrs. Violet W. Jones and Miss Ruth Hill, nurses to Mrs. Bell; Carroll Rager, local chemist employed at the Sylvania Industrial Plant; Rebecca Burns, colored cook in the Bell household.

Pick Jury First.

Defense witnesses will be John F. Gouldman, Fredericksburg bank cashier; Benjamin T. Pitts, operator of a string of motion picture theaters throughout Virginia; W. J. Tinder, boarding house proprietor and church associate of Bell; C. A. Costen, Suffolk, Va., bank official, and Willis E. Cohoon, Suffolk, V- attorney. All of these men have had business dealings with Bell, and are expected to be used chiefly as character witnesses.

Mr. Bell has long been prominent in municipal affairs here. He is a member of the Fredericksburg Baptist Church and formerly held the office of deacon and Sunday school superintendent in that organization. He is a member of the Fredericksburg Democratic Committee. He has engaged in the furniture business for the past 25 years.

Nature of the probable testimony to be given by witnesses has been withheld by all attorneys concerned.

Selection of 12 jurors from a panel of 20 will open proceedings tomorrow. Difficulty is anticipated in securing an unbiased jury from the present panel, all of whom are male citizens of Fredericksburg. If a competent jury can not be selected here, an outside jury may be summoned, officials said.

Brother Strikes Photographer.

Bell's indictment charges him with having contaminated his wife's food and medicine on six specific occasions with arsenic and other poisons allegedly purchased to exterminate rats. He is charged with poisoning and attempting to poison Mrs. Bell on each occasion.

Conviction on any of the 12 counts charged in the indictment carries a penalty of 3 to 18 years imprisonment.

Further interest in the Bell case lies in the fact that Mr. Bell's brother and bondsman, William Allen Bell, a former member of the city council, also finds himself facing charges as a result of an attack on a Washington news photographer last night.

A preliminary hearing of the assault charge against William Bell was postponed this morning to await outcome of the injuries to Lewis Brown, the photographer, who suffered a possible fracture of the skull when he was struck by a bag of money carried by Mr. Bell.

While in court this morning Mr. Bell said that when Brown attempted to take his picture as he emerged from a church service last night he did not know whether or not the man who approached him was a robber and that, feeling nervous because the church collection was in his possession, he struck out with the best available weapon, the money bag. Brown remained at a hospital here in serious condition tonight.

Hockey and New Curriculum Interest Harrisonburg College Girls

Newton D. Baker Pictures Its Drafters as First "Brain Trust."

Williamsburg, Va., Dec. 10 (AP).—Newton D. Baker today said he believed the wondering of a year or so ago as to the necessity of changing the United States Constitution is now on the wane.

"Loyalty to the Constitution has been found to be the means of an orderly government which makes liberty possible," Mr. Baker said.

Mr. Baker, Secretary of War in the Wilson Cabinet, referred to the Constitutional Convention as probably the "first brain trust" in delivering the annual James Gould Cutler lecture at the College of William and Mary. He told the students and assembled dignitaries, including Gov. George C. Peery and members of the Supreme Court of Appeals, that the Constitution must be accepted by enlightened people and must be appreciated and understood in order that it may continue to live.

It was evident, he said, that the members of the "first brain trust" were not always in agreement. This, he said, is shown by compromises apparent in the Constitution.

Mr. Baker said he felt that the provision for a two-thirds vote of the Senate to ratify treaties should be changed to a form better able to meet the high speed of modern times.

Widow, Shot By Maryland Suitor, Dying

'She Ruined My Life,' Prisoner Asserts in Police Statement.

Doctors Abandon Hope for Mrs. Grace Peterson, 22.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 10 (AP).—Physicians had virtually given up hope tonight that Mrs. Grace Peterson, 22-year-old widow, shot four times by a disgruntled suitor, would recover.

Mrs. Peterson, whose husband, William Peterson, was killed in a hunting accident a year ago, has bullet wounds in the stomach, shoulder and breast. Thomas E. Tucker, 25, restaurant employe, is being held in jail on a charge of assault with intent to kill.

Tucker was quoted in a signed statement made to State's Attorney-elect Martin L. Ingram and Police Lieut. Joseph Desmond as having said "she ruined my life and I made up my mind to ruin hers."

The shooting occurred yesterday in front of Mrs. Peterson's home as she alighted from an automobile in which were two men and another woman.

Tucker surrendered to police shortly afterward.

Death of Aged Woman In Fire Held Accident

Annapolis, Dec. 10 (AP).—A verdict of accidental death from suffocation from flame and smoke was returned today after the body of Miss Florence Baker, 75, was found in the pantry of her home here with the clothing afire.

Police Magistrate Thomas G. Basil, acting coroner, who investigated the death, said that Miss Baker, who was blind and crippled, accidentally set her clothing on fire when she brushed against a range in the kitchen. She was alone in the house at the time.

Endeavoring to get out of the house, the coroner said that Miss Baker opened the door leading into the pantry, instead of an adjoining door that led into the yard. She fell in the pantry and her clothing set fire to the wooden floor.

Mrs. Gertrude Watkins, who lives next door to the Baker home, heard screams and saw smoke coming from the house when she went to her pantry. She notified S. A. Mayhew, a boarder, who in turn summoned William H. Baker, brother of the dead woman, who conducts a store nearby.

Miss Shirley Temple Escapes, at Last, From Sinister Influences of Underworld

"Bright Eyes" Is Timely Bit Of Nice Hokum

Previewed at Fox Sunday; Hartford Gets Howard; Theater Jottings.

By Nelson B. Bell.

At last little Shirley Temple, the prodigy of photographic drama, has escaped from the shadow of the underworld!

With the exception of her initial screen appearance in a feature-length production, in "Stand Up and Cheer," this tiny Titan's contributions to the cinema have been in the nature of corrective influences upon the lives of all manner of gamblers, grifters, yeggmen, jailbirds and thugs.

Hers has been the unspoiled and utterly ingenuous example that has turned many erring adults from their iniquitous paths onto the straight and narrow avenue of sweetness and light. Perhaps not entirely that, but at least, that has been the general direction in which her previous vehicles have pointed.

Now all this is changed. In "Bright Eyes," in which she appears with Jimmy Dunn, Judith Allen, Dorothy Christy, Theodore von Eltz, Lois Wilson, Charles Sellon and several score others, this fabulous bit of feminine juvenility is made the beneficiary of a story with a strong Christmas flavor and a deal of comedy to mollify its consistent tug at the heartstrings.

Affords Star Wide Field.

"Bright Eyes" sets no new high levels of inspired creativeness on the part of David Butler and Edwin Burke, nor yet upon the helpful, but not especially distinguished adaptation contrived by William Conselman, but it does give its baby star a wide field of mood and action in which to exercise her remarkable talents.

The effectiveness of her work is sharpened by the contrasting impersonation contributed by a slightly older child actress whose capabilities are hardly second to those of 5-year-old Shirley. This hateful young person who, perhaps, may be described most accurately as a "female Jackie Searle," is portrayed by Jane Withers, visible also in "Kid Millions," Eddie Cantor's picture soon to be seen here; "Great Expectations" and "It's a Gift."

Jane turns in one of the most delightfully detestable juvenile character delineations one is apt to encounter in a year of searching.

She is the kind of brat it would be a pleasure to drop into the well some dark night when nobody was looking!

Story of Tiny Orphan.

But to get back to the story, which, incidentally, will not be reviewed in detail until the public showing of the picture is more imminent than it is at the moment, "Bright Eyes" concerns itself primarily with an orphaned daughter of an aviator and his housemaid wife—both of whom meet violent deaths—a pair of particularly stony-hearted foster parents, who are the real parents of the spoiled darling that everyone would like to murder; all the fliers at the airport and a kindly uncle of wealth who manages to bring one of the aviators and his estranged former fiancee together again to smooth the path a little for the harassed and unhappy Shirley.

The picture is pretty heavily laden with the familiar hokum of flying through a storm that has grounded every other plane in service but Jimmy Dunn's, the necessity of "bailing out" at a terrific altitude in a tornado with Shirley clinging to his neck, the precarious landing on the brink of a sheer, rocky precipice and a few other touches of similar melodramatic extravagance.

Shirley Temple must be a pretty good little actress to overcome the handicap of these trite situations with the complete success that marks her appropriate appearance in the title role of a film that derives its title from another of her extraordinary physical endowments. Or haven't you ever noticed the sparkle in her eye?

Stepin Fetchit, Fox Films' snoring Senegambian, who heretofore has held undisputed sway as Hollywood's laziest living person, is beginning to worry a little about the security of his title.

It seems there is another confirmed addict to the restful relaxations of somnolent repose in the person of Andy Devine, who, like the comatose Mr. Fetchit, is a member of the cast supporting Warner Baxter in "Hell in the Heavens," coming Friday to the screen of Loew's Fox Theater.

On location during the making of this film recently, the 235-pound, gravel-voiced Mr. Devine demonstrated no mean capacity as a solution of the starling problem by scaring away all of the birds for miles when he dropped asleep daily in the shade of a fine old tree and really got going with his snoring!

"Hell in the Heavens"—something along the lines of war time aviation, one is led to believe—is being screened privately for the dramatic desks in the projection room of the Fox Film Exchange today at 1. Further report on this later, provided we can get our speech, to be delivered before certain members of the Woman's City Club at 4:50, whipped together in time. These estimable ladies, by the way, have nobody but themselves to blame!

Variety Club Wives Enlist.

The humanitarian impulses actuating the newly organized Washington Variety Club, Tent No. 11, in the national organization, have communicated themselves to the wives and women members of the families of the club's enrollment.

It is Mrs. Helen De Titta, charming bride of the Washington manager of Fox Movietone News, who apprises me that as a member of a committee of six wives of Variety Club members she is able to report that plans are virtually completed for the Variety Club Christmas party to be given to approximately 500 underprivileged children at Friendship House, 326 Virginia avenue southeast, on Saturday, December 22.

So far, plans contemplate entertainment, ice cream, cake, candy and toys for every child. Two large Christmas trees will be provided with complete decorations.

In addition to this purely seasonable activity, the Variety Club will present a permanent library of suitable books for children to Friendship House.

Contributions to the successful culmination of these kindly gestures, I assume, will be gratefully appreciated by all concerned.

The disquieting information is culled from the New York prints that the margin between getting the premiere of Leslie Howard's "The Petrified Forest," at the National Theater in this city on December 17, and not getting it at all is a mere matter of a meager three days.

Mr. Howard will make his first appearance in "The Petrified Forest," it seems, in the Parsons Theater, Hartford, Conn., on Thursday, December 20. The play will go thence to the Shubert Theater, in Boston, for two weeks and will open in New York on January 7.

Return of the Cockroach.

In recognition of the unusual attention which it attracted and to placate those who have insistently demanded its return, the management of RKO-Keith's Theater by a late decision yesterday will present the new-process, natural-color subject, "La Cucaracha," for a return engagement as an extra added attraction with Universal's feature, "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head," opening tomorrow on Fifteenth street.

In the cast of "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head," previewed briefly from the West Coast in Edwin Schallert's "Straight From the Studios" column, elsewhere on this page, the principal roles are taken by Claude Rains, Lionell Atwill and Joan Bennett.

While the story of "La Cucuracha" is a simple and unadorned tale of love and jealousy in an obscure little Mexican cafe, its color treatment—one of the first by the new Technicolor process—is a revelation in what may be expected in future productions seeking life-like realism in tint as well as action. There are scenes in "La Cucuracha" that are unbelievably beautiful in depth of color and tonal blendings.

It is well worth the repeat engagement on the screen that first introduced it to the National Capital.

The principals in Lew Brown's "Calling All Stars," the much discussed musical opening in the Hollywood Theater, New York, on Thursday night of this week, seem to have simmered down—and that is an inept description of what they have done, if ever there was one—to Lou Holtz, Phil Baker, Everett Marshall, Jack Whiting, Mitzi Mayfair, Gertrude Niesen and Patricia Bowman. No Mary Brian, no Bebe Daniels, no Ben Lyon, no big Hollywood "names." So what? So you can't have everything!

"Fair-Today-and-Tomorrow Note.

If any visiting Hollywoodenhead tries to tell you that that was uncooked cornflakes that began drizzling down Sunday night, don't you believe him!

It was a feeble imitation of a real snowstorm, vastly inferior to anything a motion-picture studio would dare stage!

The slush it made underfoot, however, was absolutely Grade A.

In Second Year on Earle Stage

A new portrait study of Miss Audrey Sieber, mistress of ceremonies at the Earle Theater, who is now in her sixty-first week of presiding over the vaudeville portions of the programs presented at Thirteenth and E streets. In addition to an attractive stage presence, Miss Sieber possesses ability as a dancer and is believed likely to follow her predecessor, Maxine Doyle, into the West Coast motion picture studios. She already bids fair to match Miss Doyle's three-year record at the Earle—unless, of course, that Hollywood lightning strikes in the meantime.

Straight From the Studios

Demure Little Janet Gaynor Is New Idea for Ramona; Clark Gable to Do Jack London Yarn as Talkie; Late News of the Celluloid Capital.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, Dec. 10—Could Janet Gaynor play the role of Ramona? Mary Pickford once did, and Janet is, after all, her counterpart in the present day.

JANET GAYNOR.

Anyway, Helen Hunt Jackson's famous novel is nearing the production stage, and will be made with John Stone supervising. Cast and director have not yet been decided on, but almost any day is likely to bring a decision. Victor Jory, prior to his leaving Fox, was talked of for the role of Alessandro.

The possibility of Gaynor playing the role is plucked out of thin air. It has generally been thought of as suitable to the Latin type only of a modern day. Dolores Del Rio played it the last time. But then the innate character might be much more in the Gaynor mood than that of another actress, and after all it would be a real departure for Janet.

"Man Who Reclaimed His Head" In Brief Preview.

Claude Rains takes his place beside Leslie Howard as one of the finest screen actors. He evinces the art of being forceful, as well as real, in a role fundamentally theatrical in "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head," previewed, which is a picture made with a reserve and purpose that are most unusual and maintains an air of great verity.

Whether the idea offered in this document of war and peace will actually be popular, certainly it deserves fine recognition, and with war talk ever prevalent, as it now is, the film may turn out to be very timely.

More than simply a discourse on war and peace, this is a study of a man who temporarily gives up his identity as a creative artist. Because he is interested in a pacifist cause, he lets another man claim the laurels for espousing it. The tragedy is when he discovers this is done for purely commercial purposes. And that leads to the crime which is the main source of the film's motivation. It is all told in cut-back.

The portrayals by Joan Bennett and Lionel Atwill as other principals are worthy, while Henry Armetta is good. Edward Ludwig directed.

Nearing The Cameras.

Arrangements have been made to secure Clark Gable for "The Call of the Wild" by December 18, which means that this production will get under way then. It was regarded as doubtful whether this could be made until after the first of the year because of the time required of Gable at M.-G.-M. However, everything is okeh now. Edward Arnold is to appear, and William Wellman will direct, while the probability of Loretta Young's playing the feminine lead exists, provided the can finish "Clive of India" in time.

Chic in Auburn Parade.

Chic Sale isn't a redhead—not by a long way. But he is going to be a prominent presence in "Redheads on Parade," nevertheless. He has just signed up for this enterprise, which is to begin shooting December 17, with John Boles and June Knight in the sparkling niches. Norman McLeod directs and Larry Coballos stages the dances.

Howard vs. Donat For "Anthony."

It seems that Leslie Howard is still very much in the running for the title role of "Anthony Adverse," despite all reports of Robert Donat's sudden ascendancy, and the neck-and-neck race will eventually rest between these two actors. Much will probably depend on the length of the stage run of "The Petrified Forest," in which Howard is to appear. It is known that he himself would like to do the part, and there is no date yet settled on for the start of "Anthony Adverse." Fredric March and George Brent have been favored in fan voting for the production.

Donald Woods In Thriller.

With Victor Jory assigned the role of Oberon in "Midsummer Night's Dream," Donald Woods has been transferred to the lead in "The Florentine Dagger," taken from the book by Ben Hecht. The opportunity is exceedingly important.

The picture relates a mystery romance, and Woods will appear as a descendant of the Borgias, and will be involved in various exciting happenings.

Picture Pageant In Review.

Phil Regan will play the role of a bandmaster in "Go Into Your Dance," and will also sing in the production.

Mitchell and Durant have just returned from New York to appear in "Private Beach," directed by Bruce Humberstone. They were last seen in "365 Nights in Hollywood."

Nusci Varconi, wife of Victor Varconi, has arrived from the East, and the couple plan to take a house here.

Clifton Webb, New York musical comedy star, is to arrive here late in January, and it is he who will seek to enliven the paces of the new "Broadway Melody." This film has been sort of on and off since it was first mentioned, and was even reported shelved, but with Webb engaged, it looks as if it would come to life in a real way.

7,000,000 Cans Of Beef Ready

Maryland Completing Big Project for Food for Needy.

Baltimore, Dec. 10 (AP).—Beef packing and canning, under direction of the Maryland Emergency Relief Administration, will end this week, with a total of 7,876,000 20-ounce cans of roast beef on hand for distribution.

In addition to the roast beef, State Relief Administrator Harry Greenstein said 5,000 cans of beef broth and 50,000 beef tongues have been prepared in various packing houses throughout the State.

Although the broth and the tongues will be distributed immediately to relief centers in Maryland, Greenstein said, a survey will be made to determine how much of the canned roast beef is needed before it is distributed.

After Maryland has secured its portion, the rest will be distributed to relief agencies in other sections of the country. The roast beef now is being held in storage by the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation pending the Maryland survey.

Maryland Finds But 18 Chiselers On Relief Lists

Baltimore, Dec. 10 (AP).—Of approximately 40,000 individuals and families on State relief rolls, only 18 persons have been brought into court on charges of relief "chiseling."

All of the cases have been brought up in Baltimore City, State Relief Administrator Harry Greenstein explained today, and county records thus far are clear.

Jack Dempsey Opens Tavern in New York

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Jack Dempsey, the old Manassa Mauler, today joined the list of heavyweight champions headed by John J. Sullivan who turned to the dispensing of good cheer as an occupation when their leather-pushing days were over.

Mayor LaGuardia wielded the trowel when the corner stone of Jack's new tavern opposite Madison Square Garden was laid today. Mrs. Dempsey, the former Hannah Williams, broke a bottle of champagne over the stone while celebrities of the sports world cheered.

Morgan Baker.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has been requested by the National League of Women Voters to extend the classified service to the field, to the regular departments, agencies and postmasters of the first, second and third class.

BAKER.

The request was contained in a letter, revealed at the White House yesterday, from Miss Marguerite M. Wells, of Minneapolis, league president.

The league further expressed its desire to see the acts creating the emergency agencies amended so that positions in these agencies could be placed in the classified service by executive order, when it becomes evident that the agencies are to be permanent.

Extension of the civil service to State and local Governments also is advocated by the league.

The President was complimented upon "securing individuals of outstanding ability to fill Governmental positions of importance" and Miss Wells further expressed faith in the President's desire that Government service attain a high degree of efficiency.

"We believe," the letter concluded, "that such action at this time would be a very effective way of emphasizing to the country your support of the merit principle of appointment. We also believe that the position of the director of the employment service and his associates in their insistence that the States make appointments on a merit basis be strengthened."

Underwood & Underwood.

From the windswept deserts of Russian Turkestan two daring American agricultural explorers have brought back numerous hardy plants which may prove to be the answer to the drought menace. So tough is this plant that should it be uprooted by the wind, it starts growing again wherever it may land, a vital factor in a country subject to dust storms. Photo shows the Department of Agriculture explorers, Dr. H. L. Westover, left, and C. R. Enlow, examining their discoveries.

Symphony Heard By Big Audience

56 Schools Represented at Final Post Concert.

Fifty-six schools were represented in the audience when the National Symphony Orchestra played at Armstrong High School yesterday afternoon in the concluding concert of a series sponsored by The Washington Post. Every seat was filled and more than 100 pupils stood through the performance.

The success of the concert was due largely to A. H. Johnson, head of the music department of the colored schools, who arranged for the distribution of tickets to grade and junior high schools in the vicinity. The school auditorium had the appearance of a convention hall, with placards to mark the sections alloted to the various groups.

The orchestra, conducted by Dr. Hans Kindler, played the same program, comprising music of the great composers of particular interest to children, that had been presented at other concerts in the series. As the concluding number the audience sang "Holy Night" to orchestral accompaniment.

Parley Due to Decide Babe Ruth's Future Today

Clubs Want Him to Stay In League

Job at Philadelphia as Successor to Mack Appears Best Bet.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10 (U.P.).—The future of Babe Ruth, all-time home run king and the most colorful player baseball ever knew, may be decided at tomorrow's meeting of American League club owners.

American Leaguers will take up the Ruth question while National circuit owners at another hotel are threshing out the dynamite-laden problem of dog racing at the Boston Braves' park.

Now that Ruth is fat and 40 and determined never to appear again as a regular major league player, there is danger that he may drift into the National circuit, or out of baseball entirely.

Want Him in League.

American owners are agreed that it would be silly to permit the New York Yankees' slugging outfielder, the most valuable individual asset in the circuit, to seek other fields if it is possible to keep him. But to keep him one of the American clubs must offer him a job as manager.

Ruth, touring the Orient with a barnstorming team, said he would like a managerial job, and his owner, Col. Jacob Ruppert, repeated tonight that he would release the Babe, without payment, to any club that would make him pilot. Ruppert emphasized, however, that he would not permit him to become a regular player with any other club.

Unprecedented Question.

Wililam Harridge, of Chicago, president of the American League, said the Ruth question was virtually certain to come up at tomorrow's meeting. He did not know who would start the discussion or what the procedure would be. Such a question never has been brought up before. He said all owners in the American circuit appreciated fully what a blessing Ruth had been to baseball and were hopeful that he would remain with them.

Ruth is comparatively wealthy, but baseball is his life, and he would like to remain with the game.

All American League clubs have signed their managers for 1935, but some of them are working on ten-day release clauses. One of the managers might be shifted into an assistant's post to make way for the bambino, or—witness the Athletics and reports that the aging Connie Mack is ready to retire—Ruth might become manager at Philadelphia.

Manager on Tour.

Connie Mack invested Ruth with managerial responsibilities on the current Oriental tour.

Ford Frick becomes president of the National League and starts handling the delicate Boston Braves' dog racing problem and tension over this matter increases.

It appeared tonight that President Fuchs of the Braves was more determined than ever to have greyhound racing at his park, despite Frick's declaration with Judge Landis' support that he would not permit baseball and racing to be connected.

As owners and managers of the 16 clubs gathered everyone appeared in a trading mood, indicating that the annual sessions, which close Tuesday, may leave a record number of player deals.

Trainer Barred On Drug Charge At Charles Town

Charles Town Race Track, Dec. 10 (Spl.).—Trainer Chester Adams was suspended for the remainder of the meeting here today in connection with the alleged stimulating of a horse, the stewards of the Charles Town Jockey Club, conducting the local meeting, announced this afternoon. The presence of alkaloids was found following a saliva test of the horse, Diaquri, winner of the first race on the opening day of the meeting, the report said. The case has been referred to the West Virginia Racing Commission. The entries of all horses under Adams' charge will be refused for the remainder of the meeting.

Herndon, Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—Herndon High will open its basket ball season Friday against Lee-Jackson High on the Lee-Jackson court. Coach H. L. Elkins High Will Build $10,000 Sports Field

Elkins, W. Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—Construction of an athletic field and a stadium at the Elkins High School is planned by Elkins alumni at a cost of approximately $10,000.

All the labor will be supplied by the FERA, but the cost of the material will be met by 3,000 alumni of the school, Keith Cunningham, general chairman, states. The school already owns the property.

Tacklers Hurt That Strong Man, But He Comes Back!

Ken Strong, New York Giants back field half back, in No. 50 jersey, is shown being tackled by one of the three tacklers who put him out of the game in the second quarter of the Giants-Bears professional title game at New York Sunday. The former New York U. star returned later in the contest, and scored two touchdowns in the last period, helping his team to a 30-13 victory.

Manush, Myer Draw Offers To Nats

NEW YORK, Dec. 10 (Spl.).—At the end of a day devoted to conversations with half a dozen contemporary American League club owners, President Clark Griffith, of the Washington team, announced that he had nothing to announce.

Griffith, who is attending the annual major league trading sessions in company with Manager Bucky Harris, is hopeful of adding a pair of veteran pitchers to the Nats' staff, but gained little encouragement today.

The New York Yankees, Chicago White Sox, Boston Red Sox and Cleveland Indians talked trade with Griffith today to no avail. The Yankees are seeking Second Baseman Buddy Myer and Outfielder Heinie Manush; the Indians want Myer, as do the Red Sox, and the White Sox are interested in Catcher Luke Sewell.

Determined not to sell either Myer or Manush, Griffith is interested chiefly in swapping Sewell to the Chicago Club for the rookie pitcher Lester Tietje. The amount of cash demanded by the White Sox in addition to Sewell is at present holding up the deal.

High Quest Retired To UppervilleFarm

Preakness Winner, Hurt, Will Go Into Stud.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 10 (AP). Officials of the Buxton Brothers training stable here said today High Quest, winner of the Preakness, was being retired because of an injured tendon.

The 3-year-old, considered one of the likeliest horses in the class next to the great Calvacade, will be shipped to the Upperville, Va., farm of his owner, Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane, probably this week, to be put at stud.

Trained by R. A. ("Bob") Smith, the trainer of Cavalcade, High Quest won the Wood Memorial and nosed out Cavalcade for a $29,165 purse in the Preakness before he bowed a tendon in the running of the Withers.

Bierman Attacks Rule As Rap at Minnesotans

Minneapolis, Dec. 10 (AP).—Action of Big Ten faculty representatives in interpreting the "freshman rule," which cost Minnesota the loss of several football stars for next year, was bitterly assailed today by Coach Bernie Bierman.

"I am convinced," Coach Bierman said, "that the interpretation of the rule was wrong, and I am convinced that the action was a deliberate socking of us. A good story would be to contact all the other schools and find out how many men they will lose through the interpretation."

Espinosa's 146 Tops $12,500 Miami Open

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 10 (AP).—Jumping out in front with 74-72—146, Abe Espinosa, former Midwestern Open champion from Chicago, today conquered a stiff chilly wind to lead half of the field of 300 golfers at the 36-hole mark in the $12,500 Miami Open Golf Tournament.

The remainder of the entries play their second 18-hole round tomorrow, with the finals set for Thursday.

The short stocky pro from the Windy City toured the first nine holes of today's round in par 35, taking a birdie 4 on the first hole and going 1 over par on the sixth. He came home with 37, 1 over par.

Vies in Second Division.

Espinosa is competing in the second division, composed largely of players who seldom or never participate in golf classics.

Trailing the Chicagoan by one stroke to tie for the lead in the first division came Johnny Farrell, of Short Hills, N. J., and Orville White, of St. Louis, whose 147's were equaled by Mike Turnesa, of Elmsford, a second-division entry. The first division is made up of golfers who finished among the low 60's and ties in the last P. G. A. champinoship, and the low 30's and ties in the National Open.

White breezed around the first nine holes in 33, 2 under par, the lowest score of the tournament for that route so far, and came home with a perfect 36. His 69, which was added to his previous 78, also was the lowest 18-hole score posted that broke par 71.

Schmutte Dropping.

A stroke farther back, tied at 148, were Leonard B. Schmutte, of Findlay, Ohio, whose 72 led the field Saturday, and Clarence Clark, of Bloomfield, N. J. Schmutte slipped back to 76 today, while Clark equaled his previous score of 74.

Finishing in the 149 class came Jake Frassezke, of Jackson, Mich., and Maurrie O'Connor, of Belleville, N. J. Frassezke scored a pair of 38s today to add to his previous 73, while O'Connor took a 73 to go with a 76.

Four first-division campaigners—Tommy Armour, of Medina, Ill.; Phil Perkins, of Willoughby, Ohio; Gene Kunes, of Norristown, Pa., and Wiffy Cox, of Brooklyn—wound up in next place at 150, tied with Sonny Rouse, of Highland Park, Ill., and Jack Forrester, of Ordell, N. J.

Armour Adds 73.

Armour posted a 77-73, Perkins, 76-74; Cox, 75-75, and Kunes, 73-77, while Rouse took a pair of 75s and Forrester, 76-74.

Willie MacFarlane, of Oak Ridge, N. J., the defending champion, tied at 151 with two other first entries, Ralph Stonehouse, of Indianapolis, and Al Houghton, of Washington, and one second-division player, Joe Lally, of Hollywood, Fla. MacFarlane took a bad 77 to go with a previous 74, and Stonehouse posted a 76-75, which was identical to Houghton's score. Lally chalked up 74-77.

Billy Burke, of Cleveland, another first-division player, collected 77-75 to tie at 152 with Bob Miller, of Jacksonville, Fla.; Paul Strauch, of Hastings, Nebr., and Bob Randall, of Cleveland, three golfers from the second group.

Hagen Far Back.

Farther back came Walter Hagen, the old maestro from Detroit, who had to be content with 155. He took a poor 79 on his first round and posted a 76 today. Tom Creavy, of Albany, N. Y., another veteran, trailed with 81-76—157.

Celeste Durand, of Garden City, Long Island, was the low scoring amateur at the half-way point in the tournament. He had 73-75—158. Two strokes behind came another amateur, Arthur Lynch, of Mamaroneck, N. Y., with a pair of 80s.

The second half of the field will play its second 18-hole round tomorrow.

Espinosa's card for today:

Par out	534	444	434	—35
Espinosa out	434	445	434	—35
Par in	443	435	445	—36

Pros Change 5 Rules; Aid Passing

Encourage Laterals by Modifying Penalty if Forward Develops.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10 (AP).—Five rule changes designed to speed up the game were adopted by the club owners of the National Professional Football League in annual meeting.

The five changes are:

1. Assess all penalties from spot where ball was put in play, not where foul was committed.

2. A ball thrown forward beyond the line of scrimmage to be downed at the spot where it was thrown forward. This further encourages lateral passing. Under the old rule where an attempted lateral was ruled to be a forward beyond the line of scrimmage the ball went back to the point where the play started.

3. The ball is a free ball on all fumbles except where ball was kicked or thrown.

4. On a fourth-down pass or the second pass into the end zone the ball shall be returned to the point where it was put in play, except when inside the 20-yard line.

5. Following an out-of-bounds the ball shall be brought in 15 yards from the sideline, instead of 10.

George Halas, coach and part owner of the Chicago Bears, and Bert Bell, of the Philadelphia Eagles, were appointed a committee to codify the professional rules.

In addition to the rule changes, the league also adopted a waiver rule, which makes it necessary for a team after playing six league games to secure waivers from all other clubs before selling or trading a player.

By Dave Herman.

WASHINGTON'S public links golf facilities were threatened yesterday with a reduction of approximately 45 per cent when the Federal Aviation Commission presented to President Roosevelt a proposal that the East Potomac Park links be transformed into a modern airport.

The site of the proposed airport would embrace virtually all of the East Potomac course, which comprises 36 holes, the largest of all municipal links here. The Rock Creek and Anacastia courses, 18 holes each, and the West Potomac links, nine holes, thus would be forced to absorb the East Potomac players.

S. G. Loeffler, jr., is concessionaire of both Potomac Park courses and the Rock Creek links on a contract that will expire next December. The Anacostia course is conducted by the Department of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Unique Location.

The bulk of public links golf in the Capital is concentrated at East Potomac, located only a few minutes from the business section and unique among golf courses in that respect.

The East Potomac course, built in 1920, originally had only nine holes. When Leoffler took it over in 1921 he added nine more holes. In 1927 he constructed an additional 18 holes. In 1923 the national public links championship was held at East Potomac.

Asked if he would be interested in acquiring another municipal course as a substitute for East Potomac, in the event it was erased from the local golf map, Concessionaire Leoffler said:

"Public links golf has been hit hard during the past two years, and I'll be content with Rock Creek and West Potomac if deprived of East Potomac. My business has declined ever since the Government cut wages and reduced the 30-day leave to 15 days. My boom years were 1929 and 1930, and I made a small profit in '31 and '32, but since then times have been hard."

Uninterested in Anacostia.

Leoffler said he wasn't interested in securing Anacostia, since he understood that last year that course "lost something like $8,000."

"Nor am I interestel in Bannockburn, now a semipublic course," Loeffler added.

Leoffler admitted that his elaborately equipped driving range at East Potomac helped offset some of the loss suffered this year.

It is understood that the Government is planning to build a municipal course at Fort Dupont, located at the top of Pennsylvania avenue hill, southeast. Leoffler said he might be asked to take over the concession of the course, but doubted whether he would accept.

Quarles Gets Draw With Bullock

Silas Outpunches Davis but Local Youth Is Given Draw.

By Bill McCormick.

A GARRISON finish, as thrilling as any bit of action sen in local rings, earned a 6-round draw for Norment Quarles, former Southern Conference light weight champion, with Billy Bullock, of Washington.

The crafty and speedy Washington kid carried the batle to Quarles throughout, seldom alowing him to get set to toss the left hok that carried him to fame in collegiate clouting ranks.

Trailing almost hopelessly going into the last round, Quarles answered the bell with a determined, two-fisted attack that almost swept Bullock to the canvas in its very ferocity. He shook Bullock to the hels repeatedly with his left hok, which he sunk in the body and to the head with machine-like precision.

Three Different Ballots.

Judge Bob Eller voted Quarles the winer, Referee Charley Reynolds caled the contest a draw and Judge Francis Stan voted for Bullock.

The first round was even, as both sounded out cautiously. Bullock took the second by finding a hole in Quarles' armor for a sizzling left hook. Bullock outsmarted Quarles to take the third round, in which not much damage was inflicted on either battler.

The fourth was Bullock's by a narrow margin. In this period he caught Quarles with a long left to the head which staggered the Tarheel and drove him reeling into the ropes. He clinched desperately, then rallied with a two-fisted attack which almost, but not quite, won him the round.

Quarles Wobbles.

Quarles swarmed over Bullock from the opening clang of the bell in the final. The tired Washingtonian clinched, hugged and fought back spasmodically, but lost the round and the right to be proclaimed winner.

Silas, Davis Draw.

Sid Silas, of New York, and Roddy Davis, of Washington, battled six lively rounds to a draw in a welterweight preliminary. The Post score sheet showed Davis taking only one round, but those credited to Silas were very close.

Joe Firrone, up-and-coming welterweight prospect, took a unanimous decision from Joe Morro, of New York, in a slow six-round preliminary. Firrone hammered his antagonist from the opening bell, but was unable to apply a really telling punch until 4 seconds before the final bell when he floored Morro with a hard right to the jaw. It was Morro's first trip to a local canvas.

Chester Fouble, Baltimore southpaw, was awarded a split decision over Sammy Sweet in a four-round opener. Sweet won, in the opinion of the majority of spectators, but Judge Bob Eller and Referee LaFond balloted for Fouble. Francis Stan, of the Evening Star, pressed into service as a judge, voted for Sweet.

Charlotte Club Is Sold To Red Sox for $3,500

Charlotte, N. C., Dec. 10 (AP). Judge Frank S. Hill signed an order in superior court today for sale of the Charlotte Club of the Piedmont League to the Boston Red Sox for $3,500.

The sale was made by Dan W. Hill, president of the Piedmont League and corecciver with Ed Hecht, of Charlotte, as a result of negotiations with Eddie Collins, of the Red Sox. Transfer of the franchise is contingent upon a lease on the Charlotte ball park which probably will be completed tomorrow.

Here's New Twist in News: Dog Bites Baseball; Only 6 Big League Clubs Showed Profit in '34

By Jimmy Powers
(Pinch-Hitting for Gallico.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—This town was full of American and National League baseball club owners today. They meet each other every December to decide on methods of making more money the following summer. Of late the potted palms in the New York hotel lobbies have enjoyed record winter growths chiefly because of the precipitation of tear drops. The Hotel Commodore's and the Waldorf-Astor's lobbies have become wailing walls, and, my gentle pals, the moans are genuine. Baseball is on the skids. Of the 16 clubs composing the two leagues, only six have been able to show a profit with the books, closing September 30, 1934.

The tip-off is the request to play night ball by a desperate Cincinnati treasurer, the decision to run greyhounds in a Boston ball park by a financially strapped club president and the general demand to peddle radio rights and cut in on other advertising rackets.

Shudder at Thought.

The Boston case probably will cause most of the towering pillars of righteousness to play tag with their blood pressure. They shudder at the thought of gamblers taking over Braves Field, but we have an inside tip that Judge Emil Fuchs, who pays $56,000 a year rental on the plant, will stand by his rights and run himself a nifty little race track. Fuchs argues that he has sunk $159,000 during the past year and, inasmuch as baseball has failed to pay dividends, he feels a man has a right to get his money back some way so long as he does not resort to cracking safes.

President William Benswanger, of the Pittsburgh Pirates, cries: "I will vote against the proposal. I am in favor of keeping baseball on its high plane." President Powell Crosley, jr., of the Cincinnati Reds, murmurs that goes for him in spades. Now, the real reason these two are sounding off in this Canon Chase fashion is because pooch racing is taboo in both Pittsburgh and Cincinnati.

A Different Psalm.

If they had their chance to make $200,000—the opportunity which Judge Fuchs enjoys due to a fearless foresight in backing his village mayor for Governor—they

. . . The Major Tops His Christmas Gift List With a Mallory Xmas Gift Certificate . . . .

"Wouldn't it be fine," soliloquizes the major, "if everyone could choose his own gift?" And so a topping idea is born!

The Palais Royal offers Mallory Gift Hat certificates cased in miniature Christmas boxes, entitling the bearer to choose a hat of his own liking for the amount on the certificate.

There go all your worries. Uncle Tom probably wants a bowler, Ted at Georgetown wants a bound edge snap-brim, and perhaps dad is partial to the homburg. All men, all tastes . . . all satisfied. Give them the certificate and let them do the worrying and choosing.

Of course you know that Mallory hats are the only hats that are Cravenetted . . . so that snow, rain and moisture can not impair their appearance or wearing quality . . . 'sa fact!

Incidentally, the major has seen to it that the acutely style conscious individual gets ahead of the crowd. The slate grey homburg with bound edge, the new middleweight Broadway, and those tweedy scratch felts that can be worn pork-pie or snap brim, are all for his delectation.

And, you'll be interested to know that Mallorys—though exclusive—are far from expensive . . . get the idea?

Jockey Weir Adds Three Winners

Only 1,000 See Races Run in Light Snow; Gloritone Victor.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Writer).

CHARLES TOWN RACE TRACK, Nov. 10.—Racing in the raw was dispensed at this mountain turf course this afternoon and, surprisingly, a crowd estimated up to 1,000 witnessed the sport. With a thin snow falling and the mountains looming like black curtains through the heavy laden sky, the horses circled the track and everything on the program on a May day at Pimlico was in evidence here.

More than 200 persons made the trip on the railroad special and the others came sliding over the mountains in autos and carriages, proving that there are so many people who must be there if racing is within a day's journey. In the clubhouse, two log fires were burning against the backs of a hundred or more customers, while in and below the grandstand the others gathered in usual race-track fashion to stomp their feet and ask, "What do you like in the next race?"

Racing Excellent.

The horse racing was excellent with several finishes that would have done credit to Louisville on Derby day. The horses ran close to form, with the longest price of the afternoon that of $18.20 on Merry Miss in the last race.

The riding also was above average and the winners were distributed among four jockeys. Young Fritz Weir, who is the saddle star of the meeting, rode three in a row. R. Booker, the colored boy, rode two, and Clarence Jackson, equally colored and the grand old man of the half-mile track saddles, and George Horn piloted one each.

The feature race was the Martinsburg, a 6½-furlong dash for 3-year-olds and upward, and the winner proved to be Accolade, the property of D. Christmas. With the snow on the ground, many played a hunch successfully, and the winning price of $12.40 was considered mighty liberal by all concerned.

Three-Length Victory.

Young Weir continued to dominate the riding in feature races by bringing Accolade home three lengths in front of the favorite, Cantersine, which, in turn, had an advantage of four lengths on Dominus. The others of the field, including the well-played Campagna, must have stopped to toss snowballs for they were nowhere in particular. The limit field of eight competed. After running Erebus into submission in the first of a mile, Accolade had little opposition and coasted to the wire.

The most exciting finish came in the first race and brought a victory to Martin Fynn, of Washington, who owns Gloritone. The filly won in a blanket finish and only the judges could separate the first three horses. The chartmaker called it a nose and a head, with Dark Mission and White Flyer the parties of the second and third parts.

Gloritone Winner.

Gloritone always was close to the pace set by Edith M and Dark Mission and moved up, along with White Flyer, for the closing drive. For some unknown reason Morocen was installed the favorite, but was a poor sixth, while Gloritone was paying a $7.80 mutuel.

Flower Time and old Jockey Jackson took the second by a city block, while Weir began his three-winner parade in the third. St. Clare Donee and Accolade all answered his call for speed.

Kingbird made it two in a row at the meeting, in the sixth, under the guidance of Jockey Booker, while the same boy brought Merry Miss home in the final.

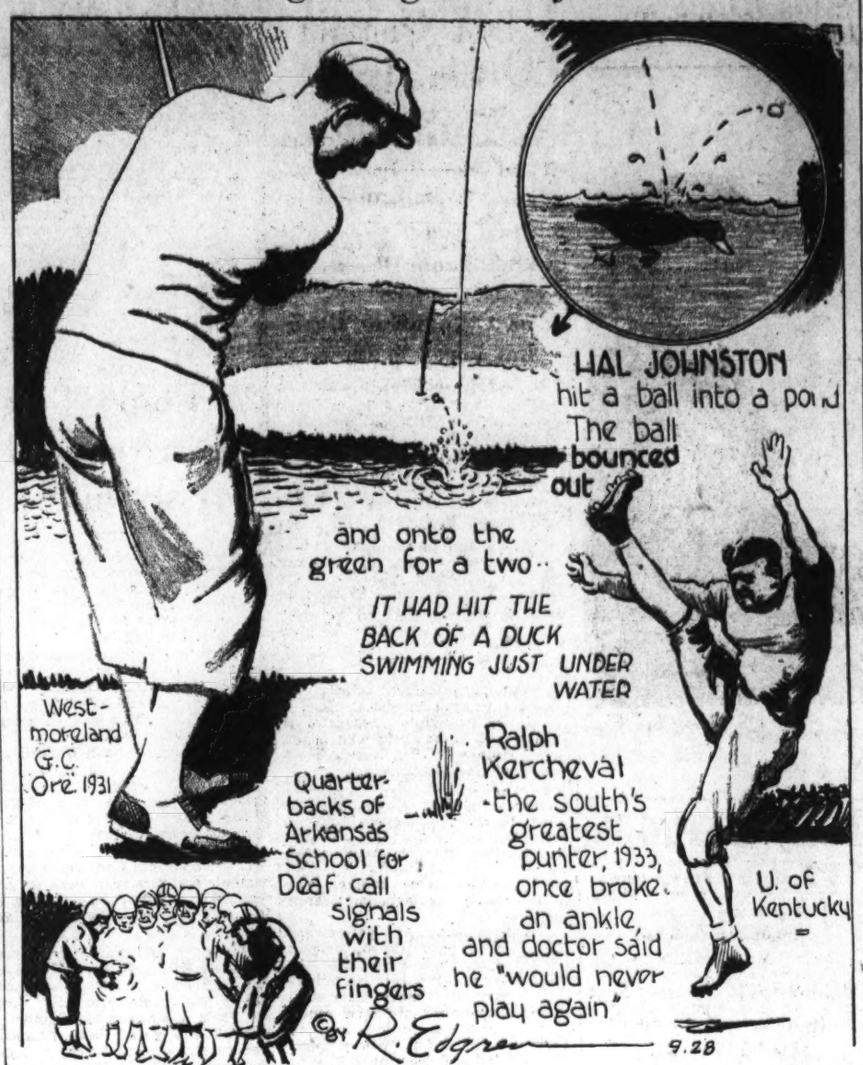
Through Edgren's Eyes—



Sell-Out Seen For Londos Bout Here

Turner Predicts Capacity Crowd Tomorrow at Auditorium.

PROMOTER JOE TURNER, whose busines makes it necessary for him to keep his finger on the pulse of the public, confidently predicts that his Jim Londos-Vic Christy wrestling bout at the Auditorium tomorrow night will draw a capacity crowd.

"There are several reasons why the bout will draw capacity," avers Turner. "The first is that Londos always draw capacity—the others don't count, but I'll outline 'em anyway.

"I think the public is eager for another sight of the Golden Greek. Jeems hasn't been here for months now and they should turn out in droves to see him against any old opponent. He hasn't got any old opponent this time, but a feller that figures to give him fits before it's over.

"Christy hung a couple of shiners on Londos and got one fall over him in a previous bout. He's liable to upset anybody the way he's going now. Look at what he done to Dusek last week, an' you'll understand what I mean when I say he's a tough propositon for the champ.

First Three-Fall Bout.

"Another reason the public's gonna turn out for this one is that it will be the first time Londos has worked in a three-fall match here. Washington's never seen the Adonis pinned for a three count, but they're liable to see his shoulders held to the mat for at least one fall—mebbe two."

A 45-minute time limit semifinal will introduce Stan Sokolis, former University of Pennsylvania athlete, against Sandor Szabo, the Hungarian Rhapsody.

In a 30-minute limit affair, Tor Johansen, the Gibraltar of the mat, will pit his 310 pounds against the 200 pounds of Buck Olsen. In another 30-minute preliminary, Abe Kashey will brawl with Charley Allen.

Dudas Starts Training for Everett

Has Shown Improved Form Since Being Tutored by Jeanette.

UNDER the watchful eye of old Joe Jeanette, Steve Dudas yesterday opened a strenuous training campaign for his fight against Buck Everett at the Riding and Hunt Club Monday night.

Dudas, who is training in North Bergen, N. J., has been coached by the once great Negro heavyweight since the day his manager, Billy McCarney, decided that Steve was ready for the bigger and better things in the ring.

That Jeanette has effected great improvement in the fighting form of the New Jersey Lithuanian is attested by his recent bout at Madison Square Garden against Abe Feldman. Although Feldman was awarded the decision, New York fistic commentators almost unanimously agreed that Steve had taken anywhere from six to seven of the 10 rounds.

Dan Parker, of the New York Mirror, characterized the bout as "the gruelling battle in which each man fights tirelessly." Parker commented further that "despite the beating he took around the body, I thought Dudas clearly outpointed Feldman. In fact, my score sheet showed only three rounds for Abey, whereas Steve piled up a wide margin, the way I looked at it, by carrying the figh to him and landing the clearner blows, and more of them."

Return Bout in Order.

Charles Vackner, of the Brooklyn Times Union, credited Dudas with six rounds and Feldman with four. "A few of the fans booed the verdict and others cheered it, so a return bout is practically in order. If the encore is anything like last night's brand, it should be worth the price of admission."

Jimmy Johnston, boxing impresario of the Garden, was bidding for Dudas' services in a return with Feldman when Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn, of the Hunt Club, snatched Steve's services away from him. Billy McCarney, Dudas' manager intimated he accepted the bout because a win over Everett would place Dudas in great demand down South. He said the Feldman bout would be accepted at the Garden later.

Race Men Urge Totalizators At Tracks

State Officials Also Seek Finish-Line Pictures; Ban 'Daily Double.'

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Dec. 10 (AP). In an effort to standardize horse racing rules throughout the country, representatives of six States, designated by the National Association of State Racing Commissions, today started the difficult task of preparing a unified code to be presented at the National meeting at Miami, Fla., in January.

With the rule books of the Jockey Club of New York, the Maryland, Kentucky and Florida commissions as their guide, the six men lifted the best out of each and here and there combined the rules of two or more States in an effort to unify the code. They scratched only the surface, however, and were not expected to finish the job until tomorrow or the next day.

Totalisators Mandatory.

At the instance of Walter Donovan, secretary of the Florida commission, the committee made it mandatory for the installation of totalisators but pointed out it would have to be passed by the National organization before becoming a part of the rule book.

It also recommended that photographs be made of each finish, such as will be done for the first time at the new Santa Anita track in California this winter, and that the daily double, in which the player seeks to pick the winners of two given races, be abolished.

Under the rules, adopted by the committee, no permit for a race meeting shall be granted by the State commission to exceed in continuous duration 45 days and no permit shall be approved for another meeting on the same racing grounds until after 30 days have elapsed.

Such a rule, as is in vogue in Kentucky, would hit Detroit, which had 120 days of continuous racing this year, but Mark Hanna, the one-man commission of Michigan, pointed out that there would probably be three meetings of 30 days each at the motor city next season. One would be held in the spring at the fair grounds, another in the summer at a track to be built, and the third in the fall at the fair grounds.

The discussion of the more important rules concerning claiming rates and the control of doping of horses is expected to come up tomorrow.

SCHOLASTIC basket ball dips deeper into its schedule this afternoon, with three Washington schools meeting invading teams on local courts.

Roosevelt's veteran five faces Mount Rainier at Roosevelt; St. Alban's opens its schedule against Rockville High at St. Alban's and St. John's entertains Falls Church High at St. John's. Mount Rainier and Falls Church also will be beginning their seasons. Starting time for all three games is 3:30 p. m.

Roosevelt, fresh from its 45-to-20 victory over Mount St. Joseph's, of Baltimore, last week, is not greatly alarmed concerning this afternoon's tussle and Coach Lynn Woodworth probably will use more reserves than regulars against the Mounts.

Abundant Reserves.

One of the impressive points about the Rough Riders' conquest of Mount St. Joe was the abundance of reserve material which Coach Lynn Woodworth was able to call upon. Although the regulars—Capt. Dave Donovan, Spiro Kolius, Frank Baroni, Francis Beamer and Abe Spivok—took the big lead over the Baltimore team, it was the reserves who proceeded to widen it.

Ey at forward and Bradley at guard were particularly impressive. Burke, Silverman and Foley, forwards; Coleman, center, and Mostow and Thompson, guards, revealed some talented material needing only experience.

St. Alban's places on the floor this afternoon what appears to be one of the strongest scholastic teams of the area. Capt. Tinsley Allan will jump center. Bob Fowler, another Washington boy, is slated to start by Coach Al Wagner at one forward, and Bob Phillips, towering football player, at the other. Bob Good, a regular last year, and Marshall Lynn, a newcomer from Des Moines, Iowa, will hold down the starting guard positions.

The Saints will need a powerful combination to stand off the Rockville boys. Coach Allan Vogt, with four of his five regulars of last year back in uniform, is figured to have a team capable of finishing better than the runner-up position for the tricounty championship of nearby Maryland, which it attained last year.

The Falls Church game is expected to be merely a warm-up affair for Coach "Horse" Holbrook's St. John's five. The Johnnies will start with their regular line-up, however, with Counselman and Swagart, forwards; Regis, center, and Simone and McHugh, guards. St. John's opened its campaign last week with a 35-23 win over Mount Rainier.

might sing a different psalm. It is a matter of fact that Crosley contributed to the uplift of baseball in Cincinnati by changing the name of his ball park to boost an instrument he manufactures; then he constructed a white enameled monstrosity in left field. It has been given various ribald names by the citizenry and it serves as a combination scoreboard and billboard.

Professional gamblers support baseball on lean afternoons. John McGraw, Bill Terry, Charley Grimm, Freddy Lindstrom, Burleigh Grimes and others have been familiar figures at race tracks. Col. Jake Ruppert at one time owned a stable of horses. Professional prize fighters appear at most of the ball parks on summer nights. Why, even the wrestlers squirm and wriggle there. If the plants can stand all these without the fumigators being called in, we see no reason now to cry about dog racing's incursions. After all, the world series is a contest not for pure love of the sport but for the fattest split of a juicy sack of cash.

Interchange of Ideas.

Somehow the marriage of greyhounds and baseball appeals to us. There might even be a profitable interchange of ideas. A wooden chute could be installed at first base for witless knaves who miss the steal signs. An unlatched gate and Babe Herman would go charging down to second with a tiny Australian monkey mounted on his shoulders trained to tug on a bridle and prevent an over-slide. Carl Hubbell could be traded for Ch. Wringlepuss Lady Guinevere of the Sodom and Gomorrah Farms. Weighing-in scales would show whether Shanty Hogan or Freddy Fitzsimmons were in the pink and, under the option certificate system, if the Brooklyn Dodgers did not win you could have the right to lead Casey Stengel home on a leash. Two dollars in the mutuels might win you Hughey Critz and a litter of speckled pups.

Of course, there may be a few difficulties but we feel these could be ironed out in time. On some afternoons the hamburger destined for Ch. Elderdown Lord Quilty, of the Baroness Elaine McGillicuddy Stables, might be inadvertently consumed by Babe Ruth.

Olmsted Grill Active.

Players of the Olmsted Grill team that meets Fort Myer tonight at Fort Myer have been asked to report at Georgia avenue and Upshur streets at 7:30. For games with Olmsted call Sox Harrington at North 2622-J.

Kostka, Barred Minnesota Star, May Join Cadets

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 10 (AP).—The possibility that Minnesota's loss might be West Point's gain was seen here today when Congressman-elect Elmer J. Ryan, from whose district Stan Kostka, barred University of Minnesota full back, comes, said he "would be delighted to recommend Kostka for West Point."

Kostka, who previously played at Oregon, was definitely barred from further competition at Minnesota when the Big Ten Saturday voted to enforce the rule governing previous competition which counted interschool freshman competition on the same basis as varsity play.

Kostka has not indicated his reaction to such a proposal.

Colonials Face Shenandoah Tonight

Pack Wallop for Opener; Only Howell, Kiesel Sure Starters.

GEORGE WASHINGTON brings the 1934-35 college basket ball season into Washington at 8 o'clock tonight at the G street gym, where it will introduce a brand-new team to local fans against Shenandoah College.

This current edition of G. W. court teams packs a heavyweight wallop, a heavy hand at the nets, if last season's records can be relied on. Every man from 6-foot 6-inch Hal Kiesel, erstwhile Sholl's Cafe center, to Capt. Jim Howell, is a potential scoring star.

Howell, incidentally, is the only holdover from last season reasonably certain of holding a regular job. Ben Goldfadden, a soph forward, will team with him, and Kiesel has ousted Bill Noonan from his post at center.

Dallas Shirley and Tuffy Leemans, veterans, are waging a desperate fight to keep Walter Bacon and Milton Schonfeld, sophomores, out of the guard berths, but their fight seems to be a losing one.

Coach Roland Logan last night had decided on only two of the five men who will start against the Virginians tonight, Howell and Kiesel. The others will be named just before game time, but it is a safe bet that they'll be Goldfadden, Bacon and Schonfeld.

Little is known of Shenandoah except that each season it comes out of the hinterlands to help the Colonials start the ball a'rollin' and always is swamped.

Alabama Drills In Freezing Wind

Starts Work in Earnest for Stanford Game.

University, Ala., Dec. 10 (AP).—Coach Frank Thomas sent his Alabama Red Regiment through a drill in football fundamentals today in freezing temperatures as Alabama began in earnest its preparations for the Stanford game New Year's Day in the Rose Bowl. Blocking, tackling, line blocking and charging drew most attention. Thomas also sent his backs through a pass defense practice.

Snow fell early in the day, but had given way to a driving wind and clear skies when the Red Regiment took the field for its first hard workout since completing the season with nine victories and no defeats.

A similar practice is in store tomorrow, with a scrimmage due before the end of the week with a freshman and third team using Stanford formations.

Beverly High Quintet Admitted to League

Elkins, W. Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—Beverly High School has been admitted to the Tygarts Valley Basket Ball League, replacing Belington, which withdrew.

The schedule:

Bill Shepherd, Mates Face Hoya Five

BILL SHEPHERD, Western Maryland's ace half back, will appear in a different role tomorrow night at Tech High School, where the Terrors help Georgetown inaugurate its basket ball season.

A preliminary game at 7:30 between the Georgetown frosh and Western High School will precede the big game.

Western Maryland won the State championship last year and will have a veteran combination back to defend its laurels. The team is composed exclusively of football men. Jim Draper, former Western High stalwart, is a regular forward.

Shepherd's Mates.

Shepherd will be flanked by a team picked from Pete Margo, Lou Kaplan, intercollegiate light-heavyweight ring champion whom Red Fleming, of C. U., defeated last season; Clint Lathrop, Jerry Comerford, Bruce Ferguson and Nick Campofreda.

Coach Fred Mesmer has not decided on Georgetown's starting lineup, although it has been definitely ascertained that Hargaden, Bodine, Parcells and Esenstadt will get into action.

Jake Young looms as Mesmer's choice at center, while Ben Zola, if his injured leg permits, will be at one guard.

GroundFrozen, Temple May Shift Plan

Is Likely to Leave Week Ahead of Schedule for Tulane Fray.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 10 (AP).—Freezing weather will chase Temple University's football team into the Southland a week ahead of schedule for the Sugar Bowl game with Tulane, Coach Pop Warner indicated today as the Owls began limbering up for the New Year's Day tilt.

Finding it too cold for scrimmaging, Warner said he wants to leave December 20 so as to get in plenty of stiff practice. Until the squad gets to New Orleans rough work will be ruled out entirely, due to the frozen ground.

Warner's announcement came as a surprise, for it had been decided earlier that the team should not leave for Louisiana until after Christmas. The departure date is not yet official, he explained, but will be if his wishes are met, and there is little doubt they will be.

Today's practice, the first since the regular season closed, was restricted to a light warm-up of an hour's duration. Some of the players wore gloves and hoods. The temperature was 25 degrees above zero.

New Orleans, Dec. 10 (AP).—Temple's football squad, which will meet Tulane in the Sugar Bowl game here on New Year's, has been invited to come South some time before the clash to become accustomed to the climate.

Citizens of Bay St. Louis, Miss., about 100 miles away on the Gulf Coast, and St. Stanislaus College there have invited Coach Pop Warner and his eleven to make that city their pregame headquarters.

Louisiana State University at Baton Rouge, La., not quite as far from New Orleans, also has offered the use of its facilities.

Rockville Five Routs Poolesville, 44 to 10

Rockville High opened its campaign for the mythical title of Montgomery County by trouncing the Poolesville quintet, 44 to 10, yesterday.

Timers 'Robbed' Cunningham Of Better Time, Coach Feels

KANSAS CITY, Dec. 10 (AP).—Glenn Cunningham is back from his oriental touring, running again for H. W. (Bill) Hargiss, the University of Kansas coach who believes some one will run a 4:04 mile and it might as well be Glenn.

Holder of the world record at the mile, 4:06.7, and finished with college competition, Cunningham has returned to his alma mater to do graduate work toward a master's degree in education—and to renew his attempt to run or approximate four consecutive 31-second quarters, which adds up to 4:04 and an almost unbelievable mark for posterity.

"I still believe a 4:04 mile is within the bounds of physical capability," Hargiss says. "Bill Bonthron, Luigi Beccali, of Italy, Britain's Jack Loveless and Cunningham—any of them could do a 4:04 with conditions just right."

The Jayhawker coach is convinced Cunningham ran his record mile against Bonthron on Bonny's home track at Princeton more than a second better than the official timers' watches showed.

"Lawson Robertson Coach of the American Olympic track team), came to me after the race and said his watch, just out of the jeweler's shop, caught Glenn at 4:05.5. My own watch showed 4:05.6, against the official time of 4:06.7," Hargiss says.

"I never told anyone about the before, and I'm not crabbing the official timing, but I believe Glenn beat Lovelock's old record of 4:07.6 by more than a second better than the timers had it.

"I am saying this only to show that they are getting nearer that 4:04 mark that Glenn and I believe he or someone else can achieve."

Cunningham will compete in the eastern indoor carnivals again this winter, starting earlier than last year when his first appearance on the boards in the Millrose A. A. games was on February 3.

His schedule of appearances will be subject to approval of university officials when he enrolls for the second semester.

G. U. Elects Meglen, Herron As Co-Captains of '35 Team

JOE MEGLEN and Walter Herron, full back and half back of Georgetown's 1934 football team, yesterday were elected cocaptains of the 1935 eleven by lettermen of the squad.

It is the first time in history the Hoyas have elected cocaptains.

The election followed award of letters to 23 members of the squad. They are Capt. Joe Saverine, Meglen, Herron, Chubby Parcells, Al Cohen, Mike Chappa, Nick Del Vecchio, Bill Pearson, Cy Cummings, Joe Shields, Bill Downer, Mike Fuardo, Bill Williams, Frank Williamson, Karl Sauer, Walter Voight, Bob Ferrara, Al Vaccaro, Joe Kelliher, Don Gibeau, Joe Lynch, Leo Curley and Ed Bodine.

From Butte, Mont.

Meglen is 23 years old and hails from Butte, Mont. Six feet two inches tall and 195 pounds of sinew and muscle, he was one of the real reasons for Georgetown's successful campaign.

His kicking, phenomenal against Manhattan and New York U., extricated the Hoyas from more than one embarrassing situation. He was adept at hitting the line, too, but not much at forward passing, although the only pass he threw was completed for a touchdown.

Next season will be Meglen's third on the varsity. He is a junior in the law school.

Inspiration to Squad.

Herron attended Saranac Lake High School before matriculating at Georgetown. One of the gamest men who ever drew on the Blue and Gray, his work throughout the season was an inspiration to the entire squad. He is 23, stands 5 feet 10 inches tall and scales 170 pounds.

Although handicapped by an injury to his back in the Richmond game, he refused to quit and played out the remainder of the schedule. This was his second year as a regular on the team.

Herron is in his first year at law school. He is also a member of the track team. Meglen's only other sport is boxing. Last winter he won the heavyweight championship in the intermural competition at the University of Maryland.

Texas and California Waging Battle for Golf Supremacy

TEXAS and California golfers have come along with a rush in the last two years, and are threatening to gain supremacy in the links world.

The Pacific Coast State has supplied most of the the national champions during the 1934 season, while the Lone Star State has contributed its share of champions in major tournaments.

Head and shoulder above the champions contributed by States in the Union towers Lawson Little, the Stanford University athlete, now out of Presidio, Calif. Little won the British amateur championship, starred for America in the Walker Cup matches, and captured the American amateur championship at Brookline.

By taking both the British and American titles Little emulated the feats of two other Americans, Bobby Jones and Jess Sweetser, but only Jones, in 1930, and an Englishman, Harold Hilton, in 1911, were to make the "double killing" in the same season.

Dutra a Californian.

The national open champion, Olin Dutra, also is a Californian. He hails from Santa Monica, a course where the head winds are terrific, and a fellow has to know his golf in order to be able to buck them. First class training in battling such stiff winds was had by Dutra, and, in a Garrison finish, he surprised the golfing gentry by nosing out Gene Sarazen for the $1,000 purse at Merion last June. Dutra also was national P. G. A. champion in 1932, and is strongly favored to win the Miami-Biltmore.

California also is proud of the achievements of Mrs. L. D. Cheney, of Los Angeles, and 20-year-old Dorothy Traung, of San Francisco. Mrs. Cheney, member of the triumphant American team in the international matches at Chevy Chase Club here last September, recently won the Western championship, defeating Miss Traung in the finals. Miss Traung, competing in her first national championship, gave Virginia Van Wie a strong battle before losing in the finals at Philadelphia.

Reared in Seattle.

Although reared in Seattle, Scotty Campbell, winner of the Canadian Amateur title last season and this year, and semifinalist in the National Public Links, now lives in California and his home-Staters call him a native son. Campbell defeated Ross Somerville, 1932 American amateur champion, in the Canadian finals this year.

Miss Marian MacDougall, also of California, is the Western Women's Open champion.

Jimmy Thomson, who a few weeks ago won the $10,000 Australian championship, is a professional in California, as is Ralph Guldahl, runner-up for the 1933 National Open. Guldahl, who muffed a 4-foot putt on the seventy-second hole to miss tying Johnny Goodman, hails from Dallas, Tex., and was a pro there before going to California.

Moreland From Texas.

Challenging California, Texas points to such stalwarts as Gus Moreland, Walker Cup star and former Western champion; Dave Goldman, the Dallas steel lathe worker, who was runner-up to Little for the National Amateur at Brookline; Reynolds Smith, semifinalist in the National Amateur; Jack Munger, 1933 interscholastic champion and semifinalist in the 1933 National at Cincinnati, and Leland Hamman, transmississippi champion.

Add to these the names of 15-year-old Betty Jameson, of Dallas, who won the Southern women's championship this year, the youngest ever to win it; Mrs. Frank Goldthwaite, the former Aniela Gorczyca, 1933 Southern women's champion, and a member of the American Curtis Cup team; Joe Ezaar, the Waco pro, who did himself proud in the Australian tournaments this year, and you have some idea of the good work the Texans have done this year.

Smith was the Texan who set a world's record for extra-hole matches in the Amateur when he engaged in five overtime battles, finally bowing to his fellow townsman, Goldman. Goldman also was runner-up to Zell Eaton, of Oklahoma, for the Western amateur championship this year.

Palace Meets To Decide on Big Game

To Play or Not to Play Maryland, Is Question; 'Gate' Also Problem.

PALACE ATHLETIC CLUB gridmen will meet tonight to decide whether or not they will accept terms made by the Maryland Athletic Club for a retturn game between the teams. The discussion will begin at 7:30 o'clock.

Although aMryland's proposals concerning a second game between the teams are known to b objectionable to the southwest club, it is felt an agreement wil be reached.

One of Palace's chief objections is to the cost of staging the game at Seat Pleasant, where 20 per cent of the bross receipts are deducted for the upkeep o fthe field and payment of attendants. Mike Scanlon, Palace manager, last night said that if Maryland insisted on taking the 20 per cent he would insist on a 50-50 division of the net gate receipts.

Seeks 60-40 Division.

Ralph Boyer, Maryland's representative, wants the game played on a 60-40 basis with the winner receiving the larger portion of the purse. Boyer has flatly refused Palace's demand for an equal share regardless of the game's outcome.

Palace is believed ready to offer the alternative of playing for a 50-50 division with the losing team to pay the stadium rental, or to go still further and offer to play the game on a neutral field, the winner to take all of the money.

The only certainty regarding the cutcome of tonight's meeting is that Palace definitely will accept or reject the game. In the event that the club decides to meet Maryland, final details pertinent to staging the game will be ironed out at a meeting between Scanlon and Boyer tomorrow night.

Another item that had cropped up last night to irk the Southwest boys was a report that the league would be declared "in" on the division of proceeds for permitting Maryland to forego its game with 260th Coast Artillery, which is scheduled Sunday.

Palace is bitter toward Vic Gauzza, president of the league, which now consists of three teams, for his refusal to grant it a bye two weeks ago in order to play a game at Norfolk. Palace played at Norfolk despite Gauzza's warning, and was barred from further competition in the loop.

Ace Basketers Dot District Line-Ups

Annual Guessing Contest of Who Is Best Man Is On Again.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

THE annual guessing contest is on again and yours is as good as mine. The question: Who will be the outstanding basket ball star of the District this season?

Nominations include "Ace" Hargaden, Georgetown; Jim Howell, Hal Kiesel and Ben Goldfadden, George Washington; "South" Sothoron, Vic Willis and Bernie Buscher, Maryland; Bernie Lieb, Hermie Schmarr, Zeke Brown and Babe Gearty, Catholic U, and Bob Taylor or Scott Crampton, American U.

Give the poorest coach in the world that group of talent and he couldn't help winning all the games on his schedule. There's more dynamite there than they used on Boulder Dam. A high scoring, fast, smart and cock-sure team it would be.

But who's going to be outsanding?

Possibly the largest construction task confronting any local coach is that of Burt Shipley, navigator of Maryland's court craft, who begins the season with four veterans sitting with the spectators.

Maryland lost Rufus Vincent, finally; "Spider" Chase, Buckey Buscher and Bob Snyder, all valuable cogs in the Terrapin machine. For replacements he has Sothoron, Roy Yowell, Al Rabbitt and Vic Willis, while Bernie Buscher, who played fairly regularly last season, is back.

Together with Al Waters and Fred Scheele, promising sophomores, who probably will wind up on the first team, this group is potentially strong enough to keep Maryland's head aloft under ordinary conditions. But the schedule is no ordinary one. Rather it is plenty tough. To-wit: Indiana, December 20, and Ohio State, December 29. January 2, West Virginia at Cumberland; 4, South Carolina; 8, V. M. I.; 11, Duke; 16, Washington College; 18, North Carolina; 23, Johns Hopkins; 30, Navy at Annapolis.

February 3, Virginia; 5, St. John's; 12, Catholic U.; 14, Virginia Tech; 20, Virginia at Charlottesville; 26, Johns Hopkins at Baltimore; March 2, Richmond; 11, Georgetown.

Indiana and Ohio State from the West, South Carolina, Duke and Richmond from the South, Navy from the East, and Catholic U. from within our midst will give the Terps all the basket ball they can stand. Some of the others may pop up with unexpected beatings for Ship and his crew.

Only Don Dutton, of the team that hung up such a fine record at Georgetown when Fred Mesmer was striving for his "G" is still at the business on a large scale. He plays for cash in Syracuse.

Paul Dillon is coaching at Xavier High School, New York City, and Bill Shea plays every now and then with the Crescent A. C. of the same town. Johnny Dunn is with the telephone company in Milwaukee; Maurice McCarthy is with the Anaconda Copper Co. in Cleveland and State amateur golf champion, while Hank Meenan is selling real estate in Gotham.

Huntington High Team Awarded State Title

Morgantown, W. Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—The unbeaten football team of Huntington High School has been awarded this year's State championship by the West Virginia Sports Writers' Association, which also has awarded the runner-up position to the undefeated team of the War High School. Decision was close as to whether the honors should be equally divided.

Youngster Rides His First Mount; Rings Up Victory

FAIR GROUNDS, New Orleans, Dec. 10 (AP).—An exercise boy did the unusual here today.

Leonard gave E. K. Bryson's Specs perfect handling, sending him to the front to head off Levi Cook in the stretch. Levi Cook ended up second and Simple Flower, third.

25 Court Tilts Announced For Duke

DURHAM, N. C., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—A 25-game schedule, opening with South Carolina at Columbia, S. C., on December 17, was announced today for the Duke University basket ball team.

The Blue Devils will start their campaign with a three-game preseason trip South. Opening with South Carolina there, they go on to Gainesville for a pair of games with Florida's 'Gators. The first home game will be with Wofford, on January 4.

As for the prospects this season, they are the darkest since Coach Eddie Cameron took over the job here six years ago. In four of the last five years Duke has gone to the finals of Southern Conference tournaments and one year went to the semifinals. For four straight years, 1930-1933, they won North Carolina titles.

The entire 1934 team, which lost the conference title to Washington and Lee by 1 point, is gone, save for midget Sammy Bell, forward. Jim and Herb Thompson, all-Southern forward and guard, have finished their careers. Connie Mack, jr., regular center, and Jim Ferguson, sub guard, who starred in tournament play, did not return to school.

The schedule:

December 17, South Carolina, at Columbia, S. C.; 18, Florida, at Gainesville, Fla.; 19, Florida, at Gainesville; January 3, Danville Independents, at Danville, Va.; 4, Wofford, at Durham; 7, Wake Forest, at Durham; 9, Army, at West Point, N. Y.; 10, Crescent Athletic Club, at New York; 11, Maryland, at College Park, Md.; 14, Virginia, at Durham; 15, N. C. State, at Raleigh; 18, Catholic University, at Durham; 26, V. P. I., at Durham.

February 1, V. M. I., at Durham; 2, Washington and Lee, at Durham; 5, North Carolina, at Durham; 7, V. P. I., at Blacksburg, Va.; 8, Washington and Lee, at Lexington, Va.; 9, V. M. I., at Lexington, Va.; 12, Davidson, at Durham; 16, North Carolina, at Chapel Hill; 18, Wake Forest, at Raleigh; 21, South Carolina, at Durham; 23, N. C. State, at Durham; date pending, Davidson, at Charlotte.

Firemen Plan Aid For Bethesda Poor

John L. Imirie Is Directing Annual Effort.

Bethesda volunteer firemen are preparing for their annual Christmas relief program, which for several years has brought joy to the unfortunates of their area.

John L. Imirie has been appointed chairman of the committee in charge, assisted by J. Fred Imirie, Andrew Pugh, William Pyles, Jesse Barber and Martin F. Abbott.

Each Yuletide the firemen gather contributions of money, clothing, provisions and cash to supply cheer to destitute families of the Bethesda section. Most of the local civic and business groups are contributing toward its success. Students at the local schools are collecting toys and playthings to be reconditioned by the firemen.

A special collection taken up in the churches Thanksgiving Day has been turned over to the committee and will be used to purchase baskets of food and other necessities.

Ens, Former Manager Signs as Pirate Coach

Pittsburgh, Dec. 10 (AP).—The veteran Jewel Ens, of St. Louis, manager of the Pittsburgh Pirates from 1929 to 1931, today signed a Buc contract to coach and act as chief of staff to Manager Pie Traynor in the 1935 campaign.

Pie was the team's third baseman when Ens became manager of the Pirates in 1929. Two years later Ens made way for George Gibson, who in turn gave way before Traynor. Club officials, who obtained him from the Boston Braves, announced he has signed a one-year contract. Traynor and Ens left tonight for New York to attend the annual big leagues meeting. Pie bluntly stated he's "in the market" for a player deal or two.

Winter Sports Squad to Be Augmented After Holidays.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Dec. 10 (Spl.).—About 100 candidates—the vanguard of large squads due after the holidays—are preparing to face full schedules in four indoor sports at Virginia Tech this winter.

Promising candidates in all sports are unable to report for training, due to the pressure of class work, but many of the athletes who will be in the lineups are already on hand. The wrestling squad, under Earl Tilson, now numbers 25, the boxers 20, the basket ball squad 21 and the swimming squad about 20.

The varsity wrestling team will be built around five veterans—Carl Lugrin, Russel Minter, Bob Priode and co-Capts. Jm Copenhaver and Clete Broyles. One of Coach Earl Tilson's problems is to replace Nelson Waldrop, '33 captain and conference champ, and Joe Gibbs and Rowland Fisher.

Promising Freshmen.

Tilson, who made wrestling history at Washington and Lee, has some promising freshmen talent.

Three forwards are setting the pace in varcity basket ball. Max Snead, a cagey Richmonder, who was a pace setter on the '33 freshmen, looks like first class varsity material. Owens (Scrapper) Day, a Waynesboro boy who stood on the freshman quintet two years ago, is showing a neat eye for the basket, as is Jimmy Price, of Stuart, a 6-footer.

The entire varsity quintet of a year ago failed to return. Coach Monk Younger has a tough job ahead in rebuilding his team for the longest court schedule booked at Tech in years. Eighteen games will be played, half of them at home.

Boxers Lose Negri.

The varsity boxers suffered a setback in the loss of Warren (Red) Negri, captain-elect and conference heavyweight champ, but the leather-luggers expect to hold their own in a six-meet schedule. Cranville (Rip) Bussey, 1933 captain, looms as a dangerous contender in the 155 or 165-pound class.

Dr. P. C. Scherer, a faculty member who was a mainstay of strong tank teams at Brown University, is tutoring an ambitious squad of swimmers. Bill Coupe, of Louisville, Ky., in the breast stroke, and Sam Wenk, of Vineland, N. J., in the furlong free-styles are showing up well. Swimming will make its debut as an int collegiate sport at Tech this winter.

Western Maryland Honors 3 C. U. Men

Oliver Among Gridmen on All Opponents' Team.

Tom Oliver's spectacular punting against Western Maryland last month was recalled to mind yesterday when the Green Terrors placed the swarthy Catholic University full back on their all-opponent team for the 1934 season.

Three of Oliver's teammates and one Georgetown man, Chubby Parcels, also were honored by the Terrors. The selections included Red Fleming, end; Captain-elect Ed Karpowich, tackle, and Joe Yanchulis, sophomore center.

Oliver played brilliantly against the Westminster machine, getting off several long punts, one of which traveled 95 yards. By a strange twist of fate it was by blocking one of his punts in the first period that Western Maryland scored the 2 points that finally decided the issue.

Two Georgetown men, Joe Meglin, full back, and Al Cohen, guard, and another Brooklander, Antonavage, guard, were chosen on their second team by Dick Harlow's undefeated gridmen.

Stock Market Drifts Lower Despite Rally

Some Specialties Advance as Trading Falls to 849,417 Shares.

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—A gleam of speculative interest in silver shares and a few specialties brightened the stock market somewhat today but failed to arrest a drifting decline in the general list.

Further expansion in steel operations strengthened the general impression that business slowly was making its way up the paths of recovery. Favorable trade news, however, was received apathetically. Some market students expressed the belief stock prices in the main had discounted amply what nearby business improvement was in prospect.

Sales Volume Declines.

While enthusiasm for the bull side was lacking, traders were wary of espousing the bear clause, even for a minor turn, and turnover in the stock exchange declined to 849,417 shares compared with more than a million Friday.

A study forecasting higher silver prices, predicated chiefly on the assumption the United States would continue to buy the metal in the world market, attracted notice in speculative quarters. U. S. Smelting ran up more than 3 points. Cerro de Pasco finished nearly a point higher, but American Smelting and Howe Sound encountered profit taking and ended a trifle lower.

Dividend hopes and investment demand for income-yielding securities directed buying into scattered preferred and better-grade common shares. Hahn Department Stores preferred spurted more than 3 points to a new top. American Can bettered its previous 1934 peak by a point, but finished only fractionally higher at 107.

J. I. Case preferred, Caterpillar, Tractor, American Bank Note, Coca-Cola, Evans Products, International Business Machines, McLellan Stores, Liquid Carbonic, J. C. Penney and Union Tank contributed gains of 1 to 2 points. Homestake Mining was bid up 10 points on a transfer of 100 shares.

In contrast, U. S. Steel common, General Motors, Raido B, Montgomery Ward, Du Pont and other prominent shares sagged. A flurry of buying in aircraft shares lifted United Aircraft and Boeing fractionally.

Fall of Four-Tenths.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks dipped four-tenths of a point to 74.3, the fourth consecutive session of decline.

A sharp decline in Italian bonds directed attention to Italy's measures to safeguard its gold supply and to the Balkan dispute, but foreign exchanges were not appreciably disturbed. The dollar more than held its ground against gold bloc currencies. The British pound rallied a cent.

Analysis of Surface Indications That Intense Economic Nationalism Has Passed Its Zenith Said to Show Hopefulness May Be Premature.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York, Dec. 10.—Surface indications have given rise to the belief in some quarters that the era of intense economic nationalism brought on by the depression has passed its zenith, and that the process of reducing the many existing obstacles to economic intercourse between nations has begun. In particular, relaxation of foreign exchange restrictions in several countries, especially in South America, has encouraged such hopes. However, clear analysis indicates such hopefulness may prove premature.

The recent tendency in several countries to ease or abolish foreign exchange restrictions may be ascribed to three chief factors. In the first place, debts and bank balances due abroad, "blocked" or frozen within various countries under foreign exchange restrictions, have been gradually reduced or liquidated. Secondly, the modest increase in foreign trade and advance in prices of many commodities have made foreign exchange more plentiful in debtor countries. Finally, and in some cases most important clearing and compensation agreements have been completed providing for the payment of accumulated current indebtedness of nationals in debtor nations, which paves the way for less foreign exchange control.

Relaxation of foreign exchange control occurs in several ways. In some countries, exporters and others who become possessed of foreign exchange are permitted to sell a larger proportion of their holdings in the open market, free from government restrictions. In other cases, governments have abandoned efforts to fix foreign exchange rates arbitrarily at an official price, attempts which frequently resulted in the rise of a bootleg exchange market, where rates have soared far above the official quotation.

Compensation Agreements Cause Repercussions, Observers Says

While clearing and compensation agreements thus may help to relax foreign exchange restrictions, which have seriously hampered international trade and finance, they have repercussions which are discouraging to a country like the United States in its attempt to effect a major revival in foreign trade. The Department of Commerce, in a survey of some 125 agreements of this character negotiated to date, points out that they are designed to effect a breach in the wall of foreign exchange restrictions with which many countries have surrounded themselves, through stimulating trade between particular countries. They also help creditor countries to collect frozen commercial debts and service on long-term bonds from debtor nations.

While the terminology applied to such agreements is not yet standardized, they may be defined broadly. Clearing agreements between two countries provide that the importers in each shall make payment for their purchases from the other to a designated agency, usually the central bank. Exporters in each country are then paid out of these deposits, so that there is no uncertainty as to their obtaining payment. In cases such as Germany, where a debtor country has a surplus of exports to certain creditor countries, the balance of foreign exchange thus accumulated in its favor is earmarked under clearing agreements to pay off frozen debts due nationals of the other party to the agreement or interest on bonds outstanding in the creditor country.

Compensation Agreement Called Tantamount to Barter Contract.

A compensation agreement is essentially an arrangement for the exchange of given quantities of stipulated commodities between two countries. It is thus tantamount to a barter contract. Often, such an agreement includes provision for the export of certain additional commodities to a creditor country, the proceeds of which are used for the liquidation of balances owned in the exporting country by nationals of the importing nation. Such a compensation arrangement exists, for example, between Chile and several European countries.

Clearing and compensation agreements, like highly protective tariffs, import quotas and foreign exchange restrictions themselves, tend to deflect foreign trade from economic channels. They make foreign trade less than ever a matter of price competition between various producers, and increasingly subject to artificial determination by governmental negotiation.

From the point of view of our exporters and holders of foreign bonds here, clearing and compensation agreements often work hardships, since much of our trade is triangular or multilateral in character. Thus, we purchase freely certain raw materials in South America and Asia, and balance such imports by an excess of exports to Europe. But several South American countries must now buy less in this country, since part of the foreign exchange they obtain through exports to us is tied up by these agreeemnts for the liquidation of frozen balances due Europeans. Also, European debtor nations like Germany, that formerly bought freely in this country, shift their purchases where posible to European creditor countries that negotiate clearing and compensation agreements with them.

Relaxation of foreign exchange restrictions is, in itself, a hopeful development. However, such relaxation, when a result of clearing and compensation agreements, merely involves a change from one type of foreign trade restriction to another. They hurt the United States particularly, since some 85 per cent of our exports go to countries where we buy less than we sell.

Bonds Record Slight Gains; Tone Is Steady

Prime Investment Loans Hold Strength; Sales Total $11,639,000.

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Prime investment loans generally maintained a steady to firm tone in today's bond market, but secondary issues and foreign obligations developed a high degree of irregularity.

The trading volume was a little under that of the last full session Friday, transfers totaling $11,639,000, par value.

Dollar Loans Break.

A sharp break in Italian dollar loans unsettled the foreign section. The drop in the Italian group was attributed partly to the latest governmental order at Rome impounding foreign assets of nationals as a means of preserving the kingdom's gold holdings, and to nervousness over the Balkan situation.

Italian Kingdom 7s lost 3⅞ points at 92⅛, Rome City 6½s were down 4½ at 81½, and Milan City 6½s yielded 3½ at 80. The Argentines sagged, along with some loans of Poland, Norway and France.

Small Changes.

There was little news that might have influenced the market as a whole, and the scattered recessions in the corporation divisions were said to have been due largely to profit taking.

U. S. Government securities were a trifle reactionary and active. The turnover in this list amounted to about $3,110,000, and declines of 1-32 to 7-32 of a point predominated.

Curb's Prices Turn Mixed; Trading Gains

Specialties Hold Firm; Transfers Jump to 221,000 Shares.

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Curb market price movements were rather mixed today. Prices generally closed not far from the previous finals. Scattered specialties displayed firmness. Trading was comparatively active.

Quotations were fairly steady at the opening but a dribble of selling appeared later in the sessions.

Chesebrough Corporation, extended its recent advance by 2 points, touching a new high for the year at 150.

Directors of Singer Manufacturing declared a $2.50 extra dividend along with the regular $1.50 quarterly. This equaled the distribution in the previous quarter. The stock moved up 4½ points at one time, but was off a fraction on a small amount of trading near the close.

American Cities Power & Light, Bunker Hill & Sullivan, Greyhound Corporation, Mead Johnson and Sherwin Williams gained around a point each. Losses of similar proportions appeared in Lake Shore, Montgomery Ward A, Newmont and Pittsburgh Plate Glass.

Transfers approximated 221,000 shares compared with 216,000 last Friday.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—A rather uninteresting session took place on the stock exchange today, with the market lacking any definite lead. Gilt-edged securities lost part of their early gains, while speculative shares and industrials dropped on lack of support. Transatlantic issues were uncertain. The market closed irregularly.

Paris—Prices on the bourse opened heavy today due to Saturday's Wall Street weakness, but resistance developed and rentes after losing a half franc recovered most of their losses. The closing was resistant.

Berlin—After being stimulated on the firmness in lignite issues, prices on the boerse closed weaker.

Wool Market.

Boston, Dec. 10 (AP) (U. S. Dept. of Agri.).—Prompt delivery was requested on most of the recent purchases of wool in the Boston market. This indicated to members of the trade that current business was very healthy in that it was based upon requirements for immediate consumption.

Estimated receipts of domestic wool at Boston, reported to the Boston Grain and Flour Exchanges during week ended December 8 amounted to 306,600 pounds, compared with 6,781,900 during the previous week.

Gossip of New York Markets

By Claude A. Jagger.

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—The big question mark in the recovery drive of 1935 is building.

With Federal Housing Administrator Moffett and Public Works Administrator Ickes determined to compose their differences over private and public finances of new home construction, the Government's program is expected to emerge shortly.

With this depressed industry potentially able to absorb perhaps as much as a third or more of all the unemployed, the recovery plans of 1935 hinge largely on the success of the campaign to induce America to build.

The FHA hopes to induce a large flow of private capital into new home construction by setting up an insurance fund to protect mortgage investors against loss. With banks loaded up with funds for which profitable investment is difficult to find, it is hoped that something in the way of a boomlet may be generated, if potential homeowners can be found and persuaded to act in sufficient numbers.

Some real estate and building authorities continue to express apprehension over possible competition from PWA housing projects. The suggestion heard in Washington that an outright grant of 20 per cent of the cost might be made to persons unable to finance themselves has stirred up considerable controversy. L. D. Garrett, president of the National Property Owners League, deplored the suggestion of "Taxing people for money with which to place new properties in competition with those whose owners are now so sorely pressed."

Visible Supply U. S. Grain.

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—The visible supply of American grain shows the following changes in bushels: Wheat decreased 1,750,000; corn decreased 3,045,000; oats increased 69,000; rye decreased 543,000; barley decreased 124,000.

Steel Market.

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—STEEL—Prices per 100 lbs. f. o. b. Pittsburgh:

Blue annealed sheets, hot rolled, 2.00.
Galvanized sheets, 3.10.
Black sheets, hot rolled, 2.45.
Steel bars, 2.80.

Scrap Steel Lists Sharpest Rise Since War

General Demand Moving Irregularly; Yield Rate Is Up to 30.

Cleveland, Dec. 10.—One of the sharpest rises in steelworks scrap prices since the World War, and certainly the most pronounced since 1929, was accompanied last week by a 2-point advance to 30 per cent in steelworks operations, states the magazine Steel.

This evidence of present market conditions, and promising portent for the near future, adds to the feeling of confidence spreading throughout the industry.

A scrap shortage has developed in the Pittsburgh district, consumers bidding up steelworks scrap $1.50 a ton. At Cleveland and Youngstown some grades also have advanced $1.50, while in other centers the market is up 25 to 75 cents. Steel's scrap composite registers a gain of 62 cents, highest since May. At the same time pig-iron buying has expanded, a lake producer booking 9,000 tons.

Lighter Products in Demand.

Despite this encouraging trend, steel demand does not yet appear to be moving forward proportionately on all fronts. There is fairly brisk buying of the lighter products for automobile and agricultural consumption; structural work is in reverse, and railroads are marking time.

This situation may be corrected shortly by what is transpiring at Washington. Evidence is accumulating that the President is to lean very heavily on spending, and that large public works projects which should mean substantial buying of material and equipment are probable.

Though steelmakers will not benefit from the tonnage before spring, this new program will entail heavy orders for structural and reinforcing steel for grade crossing separations, the most generous appropriations for naval construction since the war and any sums the railroads may want to borrow to purchase track material and rolling stock.

Ford Back in Production.

In the automobile industry Ford is back in production, turning out 2,000 new models last week and output for the industry was about 19,000 units, up from 11,000 in the preceding week. Only a normal number of unsold cars remain in dealers' hands. December last year brought an upturn to 84,376 cars; this month output is expected to exceed 100,000, compared with 65,000 in November.

Few railroads except the Van Sweringen and Santa Fe lines have disclosed 1935 buying programs. Equipment is receiving most attention at present.

November freight car awards—254—were the largest for any month since June and brought the total for 11 months to 23,719 or 9,202 more than in the same period in the three preceding years combined. Structural awards dropped to 5,39[illegible] tons. The Navy awarded 6,000 tons of plates and shapes. A 10 per cent advance in nuts and bolts restores the amount of a reduction in October.

A Japanese steelworks has ordered a 68-inch, three-high rolling mill at Pittsburgh. Other Japanese producers are inquiring for plate and strip mills, and Russian inquiries are more promising. The Army ordnance department, Washington, has purchased $497,000 worth of machine tools.

Steel Ingot Output.

November's steel ingot output, 1,589,049 gross tons, was an increase of 8.7 per cent over October, while daily average output at 61,117 tons, was 12.9 per cent higher than in October. In 11 months this year, 23,319,443 tons show a gain of 12 per cent over the first 11 last year.

Daily average pig iron production in November increased 4 per cent, to 31,930 gross tons, largest since August. Total output, 957,906 tons was .58 per cent over October. Production for 11 months, 14,949,673 tons, is 24 per cent higher than in the same period last year. Active stacks dropped from 65 on October 31 to 60 on November 30.

Pittsburgh district steelworks operations last week increased 3 points, to 22 per cent; Wheeling, 16 to 70; Cleveland, 2 to 48; eastern Pennsylvania, 2 to 20½; Chicago, ½-point to 34. Other districts were unchanged; Youngstown, 35; Detroit, 48; New England, 47; Buffalo, 24; Birmingham, 27½.

Steel's iron and steel composite is up 13 cents, to $32.35, due to scrap; the finished steel index remains $54.

Sugar Futures Up Slightly for Week

New York, Dec. 10.—Sugar futures advanced for net gains of 1 to 6 points during the week under review. The market tended generally higher on a better interest shown in raws at higher levels, turning slightly easier on news that Cuba had authorized the shipment of an additional 115,000 tons to complete her 1934 quota.

A brief flurry in spot December as the week ended carried that month up 10 points. In the raw market it was estimated that over 100,000 tons of Cuban sugars for December shipment but January meltings were sold during the past few weeks at prices ranging from 1.60 to 1.75. As the week ended further Cuban sugars were held at 1.70 with refiners bidding 1.65.

Several lots of warehaused Cubas were sold at 2.90@2.97½ duty-free, the latter price being an increase of 17½ points from the last previous sale. Over-quota Philippines sold at 2.59. News came that the Cuban Sugar Institute had suggested a crop of 2,308,000 tons which compares with a previous suggestion of 2,050,000 tons.

Finished Steel Orders Rise to 366,119 Tons

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Shipments of finished steel products by the United States Steel Corporation in November totaled 366,119 tons, compared with 343,962 tons in October, an increase of 22,157 tons. In November, 1933, shipments were 430,358 tons and in the same month in 1932 they were 257,594 tons.

In the first 11 months shipments totaled 5,507,243 tons, against 5,160,313 in the same period last year.

Grain Values Point Lower; Buying Lags

Cotton Trading Is Quiet; Market Is Unchanged to 5 Points Higher.

Chicago, Dec. 10 (AP).—Simultaneous with abatement of reports of warlike tension in Europe, grain prices tended mostly downward today.

Profit-taking sales that disclosed less vigorous buying support than of late formed the rule much of the time. Corn, however, made a brisk rally in the late dealings after announcement that the corn visible supply showed 3,035,000 bushels decrease the past week, more than double the decrease the week previous and contrasting with 1,743,000 bushels increase a year ago.

Wheat closed easy, ⅛ to ½ under Saturday's finish; May, 1.02⅜ to 1.02¾; corn, ¼ off to ⅜ up; May, 90¼ to 90¾; oats varying from ¾ decline to ⅛ advance, and provisions unchanged to 7 cents down.

From the outset, Chicago grain traders were bearishly inclined owing to the fact that a cargo of 105,000 bushels of Canadian feed wheat had arrived here from Canada. Correct predictions, too, that the United State wheat visible supply total today would not decrease nearly as much as at this time last year received considerable notice. In addition, cables said wheat crop damage in northern Argentina would be offset by heavy yields in southern Argentina, if the weather proved favorable this month, and that hot temperatures needed to ripen the southern wheat had appeared in Buenos Aires.

Cotton Market

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—Trading in cotton was quiet today and prices continued to move within a range of 5 or 10 points, closing steady, net unchanged to 5 points higher.

There was some selling of months at the opening and again toward the close, which was supposed to be against operations in producers pool cotton or certificates. December finished at the best prices of the day, while later months were 2 to 4 points off from the top.

The showing of the final crop figures of the Department of Agriculture appeared to have been quite fully digested during Saturday's trading, as it had little influence today.

Exports today, 34,864 bales, making 2,133,736 so far this season. Port receipts, 17,092. United States port stocks, 3,122,058.

THE CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE COMPANY.
REFUNDS TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Pursuant to decree dated July 10, 1934, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, Equity No. 54859, sustaining P. U. C. Order No. 1072 as amended by P. U. C. Order No. 1077,

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

1. The moneys now in possession and custody of the Telephone Company, representing the difference between the rates actually collected by the Telephone Company from its subscribers within the District of Columbia, and the rates ordered to be charged by Public Utilities Commission Order No. 1072, dated September 15, 1932, as amended by Order No. 1077, will be refunded to its respective subscribers who have heretofore made payment in excess of the rates ordered to be charged by said Public Utilities Commission Order No. 1072.

2. Interest on the amount of the excess payments to be refunded will be paid by the Telephone Company at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the dates of payment by the subscribers, up to and including February 15, 1935.

3. Refunds will be computed on active accounts up to the date that the schedules of new rates are made effective for each group of subscribers. This would be the ordinary billing dates immediately following December 16, 1934.

4. Refund checks for the amount of excess payments and interest thereon will be forwarded to all subscribers who have made payments in excess of the rates ordered to be charged under Public Utilities Commission Order No. 1072 as amended. No application for such refund will be required from present or former subscribers.

5. Where a subscriber's account is in arrears as of the date of the refund, the total amount of the refund, including interest, will be applied to the amounts outstanding. A statement of the said account will be forwarded to the subscriber, and where the total amount of the refund, including interest, is more than the amount in arrears owing to the Company, a check for the net balance due to the subscriber will also be forwarded. Subscribers whose accounts have been paid will be furnished with a refund check covering the full amount of the excess, with interest.

6. Refund checks or revised statements of accounts will be mailed to present subscribers at the address to which current bills are mailed, and to former subscribers at their last known address. Where former subscribers have changed their address, they should notify the Telephone company of their present address, give their former telephone number, the name under which service was contracted for, and the address at which service was furnished.

7. Where changes have occurred in the status of the subscriber to whom a refund check has been forwarded, for example, death, bankruptcy, assignment, or other change in status, the refund check should be returned either by mail or in person at the Telephone Company's Business Office, 723 13th Street N.W. Where it is claimed that refund should be made to a person other than the subscriber, written notice of such claim must be transmitted to the Telephone Company's Business Office, showing the circumstances under which such right exists. The Telephone Company reserves the right, before making refund to any party other than the subscriber to whom the refund check is first issued, to require an appropriate release and an affidavit or such other proof as it may consider necessary, of the identity of the claimant as well as of the authority to collect the refund.

8. The Telephone Company will make refund to active customers as soon after the billing date for each group of customers as the clerical work can be completed consistent with accuracy. It is expected that the company will commence to mail refund checks during the latter part of December, 1934, and that a majority of the refunds on active accounts will be mailed prior to January 21, 1935. Accounts of former subscribers will be promptly handled following active accounts.

9. If practicable, inquiry as to non-receipt of checks should be deferred until after February 15, 1935, and should then be made at the Business Office of the Telephone Company, 723 13th Street N.W.

10. These rules and regulations are made pursuant to, and shall be construed in accordance with the Decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and any question arising, not covered by the present rules, shall be determined in accordance with the said Decree.

Walt Mason, Himself

After Election.

Three candidates were in the race for coroner in this, our place, there was a hot campaign; and when that long campaign was done we found that old Doc Griggs had won, the others ran in vain. Doc published then a card of thanks expressing to the voters' ranks the gratitude he felt; he gave their hands a friendly clasp since they'd enabled him to grasp the crowner's priceless belt. All this was fine and people said, "The old doc always keeps his head and does the proper thing; he's always graceful and serene, and has the carriage of a queen, the manners of a king." The second candidate, Doc Snide, was pleasant, calm, and dignified, he thanked the voters, too; congratulating old Doc Griggs, he fed himself a pound of figs, and thus retired from view. But old Doc Bing, who was the third, was sore and most profoundly stirred, and published quite a screed, said his defeat was caused by fraud, by his opponents' tainted wad, and by their craft and greed. For days he sulked around the town, and ran the smiling victor down, and talked about recall, until the wearied people cried, "Pray find yourself a place to hide behind some ruined wall. The whining loser never gains the least advantage for his pains, for all his doleful sound; and if you ever run again the hot and panting hosts of men will stamp you in the ground."

C. U. Professor Analyzes Trend Of Recovery

Dr. O'Hara Prepares an Article for Post's Essay Contest.

Four Washington Universities—American, Catholic, Georgetown and Howard—are cooperating with The Washington Post in the second Washington Post Scholarship Competition, which calls for submission of original essays on governmental topics by high school students, and offers major awards of eight four-year tuition scholarships at these universities.

Political science professors at these four institutions have contributed a series of articles, of which this is the seventh, bearing upon the competition's 30 stipulated essay topics. These articles, suggesting pros and cons of the problems in question, have been written for use in the several hundred civics, economics and history classes which have already incorporated the writings of these essays in their current curricula.

"IS AMERICA ECONOMICALLY BETTER OFF THAN A YEAR AGO?"

By Dr. Frank O'Hara,

Banigan Professor of Economics The Catholic University of America.

If we were asked whether the country is better off than it was two years ago, there would be little room for a division of opinion. But whether we take the view that the bottom of the depression occurred in midsummer, 1932, or in March, 1933, we are confronted by the evidence of the chart makers that during the second quarter of 1933 business activity received a tremendous upward thrust which promised to restore conditions to the levels of 1930. From this point business tapered off to the low point of November, 1933, again expanded to a high point around May of this year, again fell off in September to a point below the low of the preceding November and has now taken several steps back in the direction of recovery.

According to the American Federationist for November, there were about 140,000 more unemployed in August, 1933, than in August, 1934, but 840,000 more in September, 1934, than in September, 1933. Barron's for November 5 gives figures to show that 190 important industrial corporations had a falling off of 24 per cent in net earnings for the third quarter of this year, as compared with the same period last year. On the other hand, it is reported that the incomes of American farmers, including Government grants, are 25 per cent higher this year than last. From one source we learn that during the past year in typical manufacturing industries, average labor costs per man hour rose from an index of 80.8 to 110.7, while individual production fell off with the results that labor costs per unit of product increased from 52.4 to 82.7, thus forcing up prices of the product and forcing down the amount of the product that can find a market.

The verdict is fairly unanimous that retail sales throughout the Nation are expanding at a rate that would normally indicate recovery, but there are plenty of critics to object that the expansion is due to Government spending and that when this tapers off we shall be left with a greatly increased national debt to pay off and a deflated industry to make the payments.

After all, probably the best ground for holding that the United States is economically better off than it was a year ago is to be found in the conviction that the fundamental economic forces appear to be set for recovery at a time when the Government and business have ironed out some of their more important differences and seem to be ready to go forward with an improved grade of teamwork.

The Washington Post Scholarship Competition is open to students in public, private and parochial high schools within the competition area, embracing the District of Columbia, Alexandria, Va., and 40 counties in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. Enrollments and inquiries should be addressed to Louise Proctor Engle, director of the competition, at The Post, Washington, D. C.
